Truman Asks Military Might Supported by Sound Economy As Insurance for World Peace

'Doctrine' Of Stalin Takes Shape In 5 Nations

Austrian Red Says Soviet Won't Sign Peace Treaty With Present Regime

By Relman Morin

Paris, June 7 (AP).—The "Stalin doctrine," Russia's counter to the Truman doctrine, was taking shape rapidly today in five key countries in the tug of war for Europe. They were Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, France and Italy.

In Austria one of the leading Austrian Communists, in a new political offensive aimed at getting a new government, let it be known Russia will never sign a peace treaty with the present moderate regime.

If his statement in truth is backed by Russia it appeared to be a virtual ultimatum to the Austrian people, for without a formal peace the country would seem to have no hope of rebuilding its national life.

In Hungary the Communist coup which overthrew the legally elected Small Landholders Party was accompanied by Soviet rejection of two British requests for facts.

In Italy armed Communist guerilla bands were reported to be organizing in the industrial north and anti-American and anti-government demonstrations developed in Rome alleging "American dollar tyranny."

Strike Crisis in France

In France, strikes which the government says are Communist-inspired, paralyzed the railways and other vital functions, creating the most dangerous situation the country has known since before the war.

In Bulgaria, the chief leader in the opposition to the Communist premier and his government has been deprived of parliamentary immunity and jailed on charges of alleged conspiracy in an apparent effort to suppress the last vestige of opposition.

These developments, in the eyes of political observers in Paris, are reflections of the "Stalin doctrine." They regard it as the Soviet answer to President Truman's program of assistance to Greece and Turkey, and the policy being formulated by United States Secretary of State Marshall for continent-wide help where the views of East and West have clashed.

[The London Sunday Times said tonight that Russia, faced with an American threat to take the Hungarian case to the United Nations, might first indict the United States before the Security Council because of the Greek-Turkish military aid program.

British Gravely Concerned

[The Sunday Times diplomatic correspondent said American-Soviet friction in eastern Europe is causing grave concern in British government quarters, which believe it may end in an international crisis.

[The newspaper said Russia is determined to go ahead in the process of communizing Hungary, and adds: "Russia has rejected the British request for copies of the accusations against Ferenc Nagy,

Tornadoes Kill Five In Pa., Ohio

100 Injured; Army Fliers See Clouds Boil, Give No Alarm, Fearing 'Wolf Cry'

By The Associated Press

Tornadoes struck last night in a number of Ohio and northwestern Pennsylvania towns, killing at least five persons and injuring an estimated 100 more.

U. S. Army Air Force fliers participating in a "thunderstorm project" observed the twister in the making but gave no warning below because "we might have been crying wolf."

Capt. Lon Kappil, officer in charge, had not been advised of the storm when he told newsmen at Wilmington, Ohio, of having seen the clouds "boiling and getting ready for a tornado."

Captain Kappil, whose home is in Waterville, Me., was in radio contact with the ground, but said "there was no point in giving warning because we didn't have the slightest idea where the tornado might strike and then, too, sometimes nothing ever comes of those boiling clouds. We might have been crying 'wolf' when there wasn't one."

35 Hurt at Youngstown

At Youngtown, Ohio, the twister injured 35 and leveled several barns and houses. Other Ohio damage was done in a rural section near Warren and DeForest before the storm moved 15 miles eastward to Sharon, just over the State line, where it struck with renewed vigor.

Two bodies were recovered from a wrecked garage in Sharon, 75 miles north of Pittsburgh.

Deputy Coroner Dr. James E. Elder identified the bodies as those of Ronald H. Miller, Burghill, Ohio, and Edwin Shook of Sharon, both garage employes.

Another death, indirectly attributed to the tornado, was reported at Mercer where Henri Todd of Ambridge, Pa., died of a heart attack. He collapsed after he and his wife left their automobile to take pictures of the approaching storm.

Three persons were known dead and more than a score of others hurt in a rural section southeast

7 Dead, 16,000 Driven From Homes in Flood

Ottumwa, Iowa, June 7 (AP)—The muddy, swirling Des Moines River claimed at least seven lives in this flood crippled southeastern Iowa city today and drove more than 16,000 persons from their homes in the rich farmland valley.

As the river rose to a record high and dirty water boiled through second-story windows of some homes, Joe Griffin, Red Cross disaster chairman here, estimated that one third of the residents of this city of 32,000 persons were homeless.

Five persons drowned when their boat was smashed in the swift current. Herschel Loveless, in charge of flood rescue work, said no attempt would be made to locate the unidentified bodies until the water recedes. Many persons were reported missing.

Mrs. Pauline Williamson, 30, Ottumwa, died of shock and exposure en route to a hospital, and Mrs. Charles Saunders, 58, Ottumwa, drowned when she apparently fell down trying to make her way to safe ground, Loveless said.

About 2000 persons were stranded during the day, and

11,000 Here Face 20% Cut in Relief

Clapp Warns Slash Is Due in September Unless Congress Provides $1,000,000

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

More than 11,000 District residents face a 20 per cent cut in assistance grants in September unless Congress finds a million more dollars for District Public Welfare.

This warning came yesterday from Raymond F. Clapp, acting director of the Board of Public Welfare, in testimony before the Senate District Subcommittee on Welfare, which is considering continuation of child day care centers here.

On the heels of Clapp's statement, Representative Walt Horan (R., Wash.), chairman of the House District Appropriations Subcommittee which tomorrow will begin considering the welfare budget, told reporters he could see no justification for an increase in welfare funds.

Said Horan:

"We cannot have any drones in our society."

"We'll have to look at welfare not only in terms of disability but in terms of the general economy of the country. In view of economic conditions around Washington, I just don't see any justification for an increase in welfare funds."

Other Needs More Pressing

Clapp's testimony at the Senate subcommittee hearing came when Committee Chairman Senator John S. Cooper (R., Ky.) asked him about the board's attitude on child day care centers. Clapp told committee members the board considered the day care program a good one, but that other welfare needs were more pressing.

He said the $1,999,470 in the District budget for public assistance is more than a million short of actual needs. Unless additional funds are received, Clapp said, the welfare board will have to make a 20 per cent cut in assistance grants beginning September 1, and continuing throughout the balance of the fiscal year.

The projected cut, Clapp explained later, is the most drastic welfare officials ever have contemplated. In prior years, cuts ranging from 5 to 20 per cent have been necessary, but in no case have they extended for more than six months.

Clapp presented figures to the Senate group showing a revised estimate of 11,820 persons as needing public assistance grants during 1949. However, the 1948 budget estimate would provide only for 7595 such persons, he said.

Load Will Rise Further

Clapp explained the welfare load in public assistance cases has risen and is expected to rise further because of the decreased opportunity for the employment of "marginal" workers—those with physi-

Midwesterners Told Appropriations Cuts Endanger Nation's Natural Resources

(Mr. Truman's Text, Page 2)

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Kansas City, June 7.—President Truman tonight called on the Nation, in the cause of peace, to maintain its military strength backed by a sound and prosperous economy.

To a cheering crowd which jammed Kansas City's three-tiered municipal auditorium to the rafters, the President declared:

"We can fulfill our obligation of service in the cause of peace only by maintaining our strength.

"The will for peace without the strength for peace is of no avail."

Asks Support for U. N.

"Maintaining strong military forces," he added, "is not the only requirement that exists in the cause of peace. We must also have a sound and prosperous economy, thriving agriculture, natural resources wisely conserved and adequately developed, and vigorous citizens conscious of our duty and confident in our destiny."

In belligerent mood, Mr. Truman departed from his prepared speech to sound a warning to possible aggressors, after pointing out that Japan attacked the United States because she thought the United States was too weak to fight back. He looked up from his text and said slowly:

"And what a mistake she made.

"And I can say that for any nation that gets that notion."

While the ultimate hope for peace lies in the United Nations, Mr. Truman said, this Nation must support the United Nations by maintaining the principle that "all people should have the right to live free from fear of aggression under institutions of their own free choice." Preservation of that principle, he declared, is the responsibility of every citizen.

Washington Quoted

The President quoted the words of George Washington, that "every citizen who enjoys the protection of a free government, owes not only a proportion of his property, but even of his personal services to the defense of it."

This responsibility, he said, "has become, in our time, responsibility to serve in the cause of world security."

Pleading for conservation of natural resources, Mr. Truman found his arguments forcibly sustained by nature herself. Even while he expressed the hope that Congress would carry out his programs for water control, reclamation and power projects, large areas of nearby Missouri and Kansas lay under flood waters from the Missouri River.

In large measure, the Presi-

Planes, Buses Used in French Rail Paralysis

Paris, June 7 (AP).—Transportation Minister Jules Moch said tonight he saw no immediate end in sight for the paralyzing French railroad strike. He announced a series of "civilian mobilization" measures aimed at moving persons and foodstuffs through the nation by auto, buses and airplanes.

Moch said that the railroad tieup, which Socialist President Vincent Auriol asked the Communists to try to halt, was "virtually complete" in the country.

He laid the blame for the strike at the door of the Communists in expressing surprise at the "mysterious" way it had broken out the night of June 5-6, on the eve of government negotiations with rail workers on wage demands.

He said it appeared clear the strike resulted "from certain orders," but added he did not want to be any more explicit.

The French cabinet, after an emergency meeting, announced that the Government "approved in entirety the steps taken by Moch and congratulated him" on his handling of the strike.

This meant that the Socialist, Catholic, M. R. P. and Radical-Socialist ministers were solidly behind Premier Ramadier.

Meanwhile, Ramadier suffered another heavy blow during the day when civil servants decided on a 24-hour token strike on June 13 that will affect possibly 2 million persons.

Skidding Bus Kills Woman During Storm

Motorists Stranded, 3 Alexandria Houses Struck by Lightning

A violent electrical storm and accompanying heavy downpour plagued Washington and vicinity last night, causing the death of one woman, run over by a skidding bus.

Motorists were stranded on river-like streets, homes and apartment basements were flooded and lightning bolts fired three homes in Alexandria, Va., and knocked one electric power line out of commission in Arlington, Va.

Flash floods blocked motorists in valleys on both sides of Arlington Ridge rd. and on parts of both Lee and Shirley hwys. there. National Capital Park Police reported many motorists were temporarily stranded when water flooded Military rd. in Rock Creek Park and near the Paul Jones Statue, in Potomac Park.

3.38 Inches of Rain

Last night's heavy rain began in the District at 7:25 p. m., and did not end until 2 minutes before midnight. Winds varied sharply between 4 and 28 miles an hour, with gusts reported up to 39 miles an hour, the Weather Bureau said.

All told, 3.38 inches of rain fell.

Virtually all streetcar traffic within the District, excepting the 11th st. line, was stalled for one hour, between 9:30 and 10:30 p. m. when the deluge of rain flooded underground conduits carrying electric power.

The woman whose death was attributed directly to the rain was Miss Minnie Lee Kirkpatrick, 30, of 649 Florida ave. nw., who was crushed to death by the bus she

'Real Fight' Due on D. C. Income Tax

Horan, Bates to Lead Opposing Factions In House Tomorrow

By Robert Bruskin
Post Reporter

A "real fight" over the proposed expanded income tax for District residents is expected tomorrow on the House floor, Representative George J. Bates (R., Mass.) said yesterday.

If it is eliminated, he said, the only fund-raising alternatives would be increases in taxes on liquor, cigarettes and amusements.

Bates said he had been informed of opposition to that portion of the bill by Representatives of several States where there is no income tax.

Raises Other Levies

In addition to extended income tax, the District tax bill to be argued tomorrow includes:

Increasing the real estate tax from $1.75 to $2 for each $100 of assessed value; a 1-cent increase per gallon of gasoline; a 25 per cent increase in water rates, and a four-million-dollar increase in the amount of the Federal contribution to the District.

Opposition to the proposed tax bill will be led by Chairman Walt Horan (R., Wash.) of the District Appropriations Committee. Horan said he would try to amend the 14-million-dollar revenue bill to include a sales tax.

Failing that, an effort will be made, he said, to have the entire tax bill recommitted to the District Committee, thereby effectively killing the measure for this session and leaving the District with a whopping deficit.

Head-on Scrap Due

Wallace Bust Niche Stirs Discussion

The Senate soon may pay permanent homage to Henry A. Wallace. But there are several dissident voices.

A bust of the former vice president of the United States has been ordered by Congress from Jo Davidson, famous sculptor and co-chairman of the Progressive Citizens of America. Wallace selected the sculptor.

Davidson has notified David Lynn, Capitol architect, it will be ready this fall.

There's no hurry, one Republican Senator said yesterday. He preferred to remain anonymous but he staunchly held there would be a scrap before it is placed in a niche with other vice presidents of the United States on the Senate floor and gallery.

"If we place it at all, we'll put it off in a corner of a corridor," he said.

One corner being considered, The Post was told by the Senator, is just outside the Senate District Committee room where there are several empty niches.

The bust of another vice president, Harry S. Truman, now rests atop Lynn's safe. It is swathed in bunting awaiting a decision of a Senate committee as to where and when it will be given a niche.

Mr. Truman selected Charles Keck of New York to fashion the bust. Keck and the American Legion are to present a copy to President Truman Monday at the White House.

An 1898 resolution of Congress provides that busts of vice presidents should be enshrined in niches of the Senate wing at Government expense.

Chemical Blast Injures Professor At American U.

Dr. Robert Roy Coons, head of American University's chemistry department, suffered minor cuts about the arms yesterday when a chemical flask exploded in a basement laboratory in Hurst Hall.

W. H. Waldo, 1527 E. Falkland ln., Silver Spring, an instructor, said Dr. Coons was cleaning the flask at a sink about 6 p. m. when water mixed with sodium, caused it to explode. He said the professor apparently mistook the sodium for another chemical.

Coons, Waldo and Miss Mary Elizabeth Smith, 3504 Albemarle st. nw., laboratory assistant, were cleaning the laboratory preparatory to opening of American University's summer term, Waldo said. There was no damage to the laboratory.

Washington State House Candidates In Close Election

Olympia, Wash., June 7 (AP).—A Republican newspaper publisher who supported President Truman's foreign policy and an avowed "progressive" Democrat were locked in a close race tonight in a special election to fill a vacant U. S. House seat from Washington State's Third District.

The returns from 412 of the district's 607 precincts gave Republican Russell V. Mack 23,321 to Democrat Charles Savage's 21,973.

Mack led virtually from the start, but his margin fluctuated as the count progressed.

Returns two hours after the polls closed were so close that it appeared isolated, late reporting precincts and possibly even absentee ballots might decide the contest.

Jefferson Too?

Loyalty Bill Would Bar Lincoln, Witness Declares

The Federal employe loyalty bill would have barred Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Jackson from Government employ, the House Civil Service Committee was told yesterday.

The assertion, made by Samuel H. Jaffe of the American Jewish Congress, brought expressions of incredulity from Chairman Edward H. Rees (R., Kans.), sponsor of the bill, Representative Tom Murray (D., Tenn.), and other committee members.

Jaffe was one of only two witnesses appearing yesterday. Both he and Martin Popper, national vice president of the National Lawyers' Guild, opposed both the bill and the President's loyalty order as proposed, and both visibly irked the committeemen by their persistence in discussing the bill's relation to the Bill of Rights.

Undaunted, Jaffe, who said he agreed thoroughly with the objectives of the bill, declared Lincoln would have violated Section 5 of the Rees bill. This section defines, as one of the grounds which the Loyalty Review Board could consider in determining disloyalty, "advocacy of revolution of force or violence to alter the constitutional form of Government of the United States."

Jaffe read part of the following from the first Republican President's first inaugural address:

"This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it, or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it."

He also said Lincoln had illegally suspended the writ of habeas corpus, according to Chief Justice of the United States Roger Taney. As the hearing was adjourned at this point, Jaffe did not elaborate his assertions about Jefferson and Jackson.

Popper drew fire when he refused to say whether the Lawyers Guild has Communists as members, terming the question, asked by Murray, "irrelevant." When Rees attempted to get an answer from him, Popper exclaimed "This is not an investigation!"

The witnesses agreed that the Rees proposal would not provide maximum protection for the innocent. This, said Popper, would result in "greater danger to security" than any other part of the measure.

The bill's provision for a list of disloyal organizations to be designated by the Attorney General, according to Popper, would give rise to the "clear danger that the bill invites an inquisition into political opinions."

Popper said that under the bill, "you'd categorize a person as disloyal without proof and even without an opportunity to defend himself," because of "the lack of adequate judicial standards and procedural safeguards."

Story of Downfall

Nagy Ridicules Red Charge He Plotted Against Hungary

Geneva, June 7 (AP).—Ferenc Nagy today told his story of the events leading up to his ouster as Premier of Hungary by the Communists, declared that Russian accusations against him were ridiculous, and said "there was no constitutional ground for my resignation."

Nagy resigned after the Russians presented to the Hungarian Government charges involving him in an alleged plot to overthrow the republic—but he said he did not step down until his five-year-old son was safely delivered to him.

The former premier, who received a dozen reporters at the villa in which he lives in exile here, observed "I would have been plotting against myself" if he had conspired against the Hungarian government.

He shrugged when asked how he was going to live. He said he was the son of "poor peasant people", had only a few suits of clothes and that his so-called estate in Hungary amounted to only about one acre.

He denied that any family fortune of $80,000 had been brought out of Hungary by his son.

(Budapest dispatches several days ago said Nagy had agreed not to make statements to the press in order to safeguard the safety of his son, then in Hungary, and to protect his pension.)

Nagy said the Hungarian legation here had reported his resignation prematurely in the last days of May. He said the resignation was dated June 1, and that it was not actually handed in until June 2.

Nagy gave this account of the events:

He departed May 14 for a vacation in Switzerland, leaving his little son at home, after President Zoltan Tildy and leaders of the Small Holders Party told him they

6000-Volt Charge

Electric Shock Kills Worker, Fells Two Others at Crane

A 32-year-old District laborer was killed and two other men injured slightly yesterday when an electric crane was hit by a 6000-volt charge at Bradbury Heights, Md.

The victim, pronounced dead on arrival at Casualty Hospital, was identified as Jesse Milton Lee of 2614 K st. nw.

Police said Lee was holding a guide cable to the crane's boom when it swung within a few feet of an overhead high-tension wire. The charge leaped from the wire to the boom.

Knocked down by the shock, but injured only slightly, were Arthur Carpenter, 50, a crane operator, of 1801 N. Nelson st. Arlington, and Frank Zell 18, an oiler, of 150 F st. se., who were standing alongside Lee.

Carpenter, who had one foot on the cable at the time of the shock, was treated by the Capital Heights Rescue Squad for slight burns on his foot. Zell declined treatment.

Members of the rescue squad said Lee had a "very faint pulse" when they arrived, but he died before he arrived at the hospital. Artificial respiration was administered in the ambulance en route.

The crane, being used in the construction of a sewage pipe line on the 5500 block of Belt ave., was first reported to have struck the high tension line, but this was denied by Zell and other workmen.

Police said the crane was being operated at the time of the accident by J. P. Crocker, of 4610 Rosedale ave., Bethesda. He also denied the boom struck the electric line.

Zell said the shock came without warning. "There seemed to be a flash of fire and then everything went black for a second," he said.

Lee either was hurled several feet by the charge or attempted to run when he first felt the shock, Zell said. He collapsed about 10 feet from the cable.

Truman Asks Military Might

dent's talk was an appeal to the agrarian and conservative Midwest to lend him its strength in fighting economy measures of the Republican Congress which have played havoc with his programs for reclamation and development. At the same time, he managed to tie in this program, on the basis of national and world security, with universal training, traditionally unpalatable to this section of the country.

"We are fast becoming a (have not) Nation with respect to many important minerals," he warned. "We are short of some basic materials essential to an economy of full production and employment. We are short of copper, of steel, of lead, and of many other critical materials."

"We are faced with the danger of a shortage of petroleum products. The United States is now using more oil each day than did the entire world before the war. Shortages of fuel oil have already appeared in parts of the Middle West. A nation is only as strong as its productive capacity and our capacity is now limited by our shortages."

"We have laws designed to conserve and develop our natural resources and these laws, if wisely administered, would largely eliminate our shortages. However, we are now in grave danger that these protecting laws will be made ineffective by the failure of Congress to provide the money necessary for their administration."

Repeatedly, the President warned that the Administration's agricultural programs were threatened by recent moves in Congress. While he did not once appeal directly and flatly for the support of his own Midwest, what he did say and the place he chose to say it made tonight's speech a definite tactical move in his fight with an opposition Congress seeking economies at the expense of long-standing Democratic objectives.

Mr. Truman was introduced by Maj. Gen. Paul W. Beade, World War II commander of the Thirty-fifth Division, in which the President was a World War captain. Just before he spoke, wreaths were presented in memory of the division's dead by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, French Ambassador Henri Bonnet, Mayor Georges-Pierre Lavalley of St. Lo, France, and other distinguished guests.

Truman's Address at Thirty-fifth Division's Reunion Service

Kansas City, Mo., June 7 (U.P.).—Text of President Truman's address to Thirty-fifth Division Reunion Memorial Service:

WE HAVE come together tonight to honor the memory of the men of the Thirty-fifth Division who died in the defense of their country and, in honoring them, we pay tribute also to the memory of all those who have lost their lives in the wars in which our Nation has been engaged.

Men of the Thirty-fifth Division have twice fulfilled the obligation of every American citizen to serve in the defense of his homeland. More than 300 years ago the first settlers in the North American colonies established a tradition of military training and service. Service in the defense of the new colonies was, to them, an essential and unquestioned duty of citizenship. We owe our existence as a nation to the tradition of service by our citizens, for it was an army of citizen soldiers which George Washington led to victory in the American Revolution. At the end of that war, the Congress asked General Washington to give his views on what the military policy of the new nation should be. Washington replied:

"It may be laid down as a primary position, and the basis of our system, that every citizen who enjoys the protection of a free government, owes not only a proportion of his property, but even of his personal services to the defense of it . . ."

The responsibility, described by Washington, of the citizens of the new nation to maintain the security of their homes has become, in our time, responsibility to serve in the cause of world security. The only security for the United States, or for any other nation, when the alternative to peace is death and destruction, lies in the abolition of war.

Our obligation, as citizens of the strongest nation in the world, is to lead the peoples of the earth toward the goal of lasting peace.

Our hopes for peace based on justice and international cooperation are embodied in the United Nations. We shall continue every effort to attain the ideal of a United Nations which can banish war for all time.

IN SUPPORTING the United Nations, we must always sustain the principle on which world peace must rest. That principle is that all people should have the right to live free from fear of aggression under institutions of their own free choice. Our responsibility to lead the peoples of the world in the search for peace takes the form of helping less fortunate peoples who are earnestly striving to improve or reconstruct the institutions of free and independent nations.

We can fulfill our obligation of service in the cause of peace only by maintaining our strength.

The will for peace without the strength for peace is of no avail.

The disintegration of our military forces since the surrender of Germany and Japan is an encouragement to nations who regard weakness on the part of peace-loving nations as an invitation to aggression. And the countries whose people share our ideals, and who look to us for leadership, but who are weak in resources or manpower, lose faith in our ability to support the principles for which we stand.

Hitler's dream of controlling the world was spurred by his belief that the western nations were weak and lacked the will to resist. Hitler's eagerness for war increased as his estimate of the strength of the democracies decreased. Unpreparedness on the part of his opponents precipitated his decision to march into Poland in 1939. Japan struck at Pearl Harbor because she thought the United States was too weak to fight back.

Hence we must maintain our Army, our Navy and our Air Force in effective readiness for any emergency. They should be organized in an efficient single military establishment and they should be supported by reserves of well-trained civilians.

MAINTAINING strong military forces is not the only requirement that exists in the cause of peace. We must also have a sound and prosperous economy, thriving agriculture, national resources wisely conserved and adequately developed, and vigorous citizens conscious of our duty and confident in our destiny.

A healthy citizenry is the most important element of our national strength. We must develop a national health program which will furnish adequate public health services, and ample medical care and facilities for all areas of the country and all groups of our people.

We must also raise the level of minimum wages, broaden our social security benefits, provide decent housing, equalize educational opportunities and in every way insure that the welfare and standards of living of our citizens improve steadily. The strength that derives from a people confident in their personal security, and aware of world needs, is an overwhelming power for peace.

We must work earnestly to insure that our economy stays in high gear, and that we have maximum production, maximum employment, and maximum purchasing power. We must have an economic system that provides opportunities for all men willing and able to work. This will take much effort, and some necessary steps are long overdue, but prudent fiscal and tax policies, certain price and wage adjustments, labor-management harmony, and a carefully planned program of essential public works will go far toward insuring that the present level of productivity—the highest in our entire history—will continue.

To a greater extent than ever before, our prosperity and security depend upon our natural resources. We are fast becoming a "have not" Nation with respect to many important minerals. We are short of some basic materials essential to an economy of full production and employment. We are short of copper, of steel, of lead, and of many other critical materials. We are faced with the danger of a shortage of petroleum products. The United States is now using more oil each day than did the entire world before the war. Shortages of fuel oil have already appeared in parts ofthe Middle West. A nation is only as strong as its productive capacity, and our capacity is now limited by our shortages.

WE HAVE laws designed to conserve and develop our natural resources and these laws, if wisely administered, would largely eliminate our shortages. However, we are now in grave danger that these protecting laws will be made ineffective by the failure of the Congress to provide the money necessary for their administration.

We have a long-standing policy that public power resources should be developed for the benefit of the people. As a result of this policy, our country had the means of rapidly expanding our supply of electric power in the early days of the war. These supplies of low-cost hydro-electric power, particularly in the Tennessee Valley and in the Pacific Northwest, provided the means by which we were able speedily to increase our production of aluminum and other light metals and to supply the huge amounts of power required for our atomic energy plants.

Despite the wartime expansion, however, we face critical shortages in our national supply of power in the next few years. We need more and more electrical power to expand old industries, build new ones, extract minerals from low-grade ones, produce atomic materials for peacetime use, and to expand the electrification of our farms.

Our public power program must be carried forward. We must continue to build the multiple-purpose projects that conserve our precious resources and develop low cost energy. We must build transmission lines and substations to bring the power to markets. The hydro-electric power program is vital to the economic welfare of the Nation, and in some Western States hydro-electric power is almost the sole source of available energy. All the great industries of the West—lumbering, agriculture, mining—will be retarded for want of electric power. Nothing must prevent the full development and use of public power in these areas where it is needed the most.

The great dams which harness the power of our Western rivers also store the water and make it available to reclaim lands that once were barren deserts.

RECLAMATION projects are providing the country with additional acreage to grow food which is needed at home and abroad in this time of world food shortages. The utilization of the water resources of the West for power and reclamation is the key to the development of the economic opportunities of this vast part of our country. It will ultimately provide millions of jobs for our citizens in areas which are now sparsely settled.

Our veterans are hungry for these opportunities. They want land on which to settle so that they can become a constructive part of the Nation's economic life. We must provide our veterans with the land they need. It is my hope that the reclamation projects so essential to the development of this part of our economy will not be curtailed.

Money spent for water control, reclamation, and power projects cannot be regarded in the same light as expenses for other construction programs. Appropriations for reclamation and power projects are investments which are repaid by the water and power consumers. To curtail construction on projects already begun because construction costs are high is to waste vast amounts of public capital already invested by postponing the time when repayment begins.

Our national strength requires that we think in terms of our 1947 needs and responsibilities, not in terms of the past. I earnestly hope that the Senate will not follow the House of Representatives in cutting our conservation, reclamation, and power programs back to the level of a decade ago. We must go forward with the development of the natural resources upon which depend our economic strength and our position of world leadership.

One of the great lessons of history is that no nation can be stronger than its agriculture. Hungry and ill-nourished people cannot practice the arts of democratic government and peaceful commerce. Peace cannot be built on a foundation of human want.

WE IN THIS COUNTRY some years ago wisely adopted a national policy which declared that all of us must share with the farmer the responsibility for maintaining our agricultural resources. We said that the farmer must be protected against low prices and low income, against some of the hazards of weather and against the danger of inadequate credit. We decided to keep reserves of basic crops from the fat years for use in the lean years.

Because we had adopted that policy, American agriculture was able to set new production records during every year of the war. Because of its reserves, in the granary and in the soil, because of its basic strength, agriculture increased its production fully one third even though many people left the farms to join the armed forces or to work in industry.

The most remarkable of our production records was that the increases were in the crops for which the Government asked increases. We were able to supply our armed forces the kind of food they needed in the amount they needed. We had the best-fed fighting forces the world has ever seen, and we supplied our Allies with the kinds of food they especially required.

When the fighting ended, there was a world-wide food emergency. Grain was the most needed commodity. During the war, the United States had not specialized in grain production. But as a result of our farm policy our agriculture was so adaptable that we were able, almost at once, to set new world records in grain exports. We have saved millions of lives of persons abroad. Our grain shipments have helped us to meet the test as the world proponent of democracy, freedom, and peace.

Now we face a new challenge. Our entire farm program is endangered by recent legislative action. I would be gravely concerned if any effort to undermine our farm policy were successful.

A year ago our Government made a pledge to our farmers to carry on the program of soil conservation which is so vital to prosperous, productive farming. The farmers have a right to expect that this pledge be kept. We should guard against all efforts to destroy the program designed to carry out soil conservation practices on our farms.

The farmer-committee system, a basic part of the program for balanced farm production and soil conservation, has worked successfully. Under it, farmers elect committeemen from among their neighbors to run the agricultural conservation program, to handle commodity loans, to maintain the ever-normal granary, and to carry out emergency marketing programs in time of extreme surplus. The farmer-committee system should be continued.

We must always bear in mind the effort upon our national strength and the welfare of our people when restrictions or curtailments in our farm program are proposed. We cannot afford to deprive veterans and farm tenants of the opportunity to buy farms of their own.

If American agriculture is to continue its rapid progress, we must maintain our important research projects in natural science and economics, and we must continue with our work of rural electrification, forest protection, and aid to locally organized soil conservation districts.

I SINCERELY hope that on careful reflection and consideration the Congress will provide the appropriations necessary for those projects and services which are designed to provide a better, fuller life for our people and a more stable, productive economy for our Nation.

By renewing the well-springs of our strength, by enlarging our capacities for growth, we shall be able to fulfill the obligation of service which is our heritage.

I have commented at length on some of the factors that are necessary elements in our leadership toward the goal of enduring peace.

But more important than any of these is the need for divine guidance to direct our steps. When the peoples of the world shall accept the principle that it is the will of God that there be peace—there will be peace.

And it is our obligation to be strong and to have faith in order that we may do our share in carrying out the will of God.

The inspiration which we receive from the heroic men whom we honor tonight will make more resolute our determination to put into practice the teachings of the great disciple of peace.

Truman Drives At Fast Clip

Kansas City, Mo., June 7 (U.P.).—President Truman went for a fast ride today through brilliant sunshine of a warm afternoon.

He drove himself, at speeds ranging up to 70 miles an hour.

At least, that was what photographers following him in a bouncing jeep swore he was driving.

After a short visit at his mother's home in Grandview, Mr. Truman took over the steering wheel to speed to Independence for a visit with in-laws.

Truman Due to Speak At Monticello on 4th

Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation officials in Charlottesville, Va., yesterday announced that President Truman will make a Fourth of July address from Jefferson's home, Monticello. He is expected to drive there and make a tour of the mansion and grounds.

President Marches With His Old Outfit

By a Post Reporter

Kansas City.—On foot and transparently happy, President Truman today led his beloved Thirty-fifth Division in parade along a mile and a half of hot Kansas City streets.

Just ahead of him was an honor guard of his own Battery D, 129th Field Artillery. Behind him rolled the automobile he had unexpectedly deserted to walak with his old comrades. Around him Secret Service men hastily deployed, caught off guard by this sudden impulsive move of the boss.

Of this, of course, Mr. Truman knew nothing. He strode up Grand avenue, flashing his broad smile, swinging a cane someone had given him, waving his soft straw hat at the crowds which lined the street. Small boys broke away from their mamas, eluded police and Secret Service men and rushed to grasp his hand. The President greeted them happily, shook hands with them and spoke with them, leaving them practically unconscious with joy and importance.

Starts Out Riding

During the first 3½ miles of the 5-mile route the President rode on the folded top of an open automobile, doffing his hat and waving at the cheering crowds. In the automobile with him were his brother, Vivian Truman, and Mayor William Kemp of Kansas City.

At 22nd st. and Grand ave., he suddenly opened the door and stepped to the street. The automobile did not stop rolling slowly; the driver, in fact, did not know he had lost his valuable cargo until he saw Mr. Truman walk past the front bumper.

From there to the impressive Liberty Memorial to World War I dead, the President walked. The road lay uphill all the way, and it was hot. Perspiration streamed down the President's forehead and beaded his face but neither his pace nor his smile faltered.

Eisenhower Borrows Plane

He was obviously happier than he had yet been on his trip which has been filled with happiness for him. And the crowd liked it too; its tumult redoubled; it whooped itself hoarse for its President; its fellow Midwesterner walking there among the men with whom he had marched to battle.

At the base of the great fluted memorial shaft thrusting up from a hill opposite Union Station, a reviewing stand had been set up. Ramps had been carefully constructed so the Presidential automobile could mount a series of steps to the foot of the stand. All this turned out to be wasted effort.

Mr. Truman walked down the middle of the road between other members of Battery D, standing rigidly at attention despite their surprise at the unpresidential mode of the President's arrival. He climbed the steps and mounted the stand, where he was joined by French Ambassador Henri Bonnet, Mayor George-Pierre Lavalley, of St. Lo, France, and other members of the official party. General Dwight D. Eisenhower had borrowed the Sacred Cow to fly to his home at Abilene, Kas., for a brief visit with his family.

The men who had marched beside his car in the first part of the parade yelling, "Hi, Harry," and "Hi, Captain," were proud of him for what he had done in marching with them. What lay back of his impulse to join them was simple enough.

"The fellows needed relief," he said, "and I couldn't let them down. It was a hot climb up that hill."

Borrows Car for Drive

After reviewing the parade, Mr. Truman was taken to one of the halls flanking the memorial shaft. Somehow he was led to one it had not been intended he would visit, and he scrambled under a timber barrier built across its front to hold back the crowd. After a few minutes in the hall inspecting maps of World War I battlefields, he walked down a grassy hillside to his automobile and returned to the Muehlebach Hotel for lunch.

The informality adopted by Mr. Truman, this morning continued when he drove to Grandview, Mo., to visit his mother, Mrs. Martha Truman, who has been critically ill. Ready to return at 2:35 p. m., he borrowed an automobile and took the wheel to drive himself to Independence, Mo., 22 miles away. There he visited his brother-in-law, Frank Wallace, and left for Kansas City again at 3:10.

Mr. Truman said he had found his mother's condition still improved after her surprising rally from her serious illness.

"Mother had a good breakfast," he said, "but not so much for lunch. But I'm very much encouraged over the progress she's making."

Immediately upon his return to Kansas City, the President was guest of honor at a reception at the Muehlebach by his comrades of Battery D, 73 of whom registered for the reunion.

The President will leave by plane Sunday for Washington.

He spent something more than a half hour with his men and shook hands with each of them. They were astonished and delighted at his ability to remember little instances in which they were involved 30 years ago.

Nearby Bank Robbed While Truman Marches

By a Post Reporter

Kansas City, June 7.—A block away, while President Truman marched and crowds cheered and police clustered thickly, a lone gunman walked into the Commerce Trust Co. today, thrust a pistol under the nose of a teller and walked out again with $1525 in cash. The bank lobby was deserted; even the special policeman had gone out to watch the parade go by.

Hickenlooper Says Russia Blocks Peace

Iowa City, Iowa, June 7 (AP).—Senator Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) declared today "the center of totalitarianism and the rumblings of world conquest have shifted from Berlin to Moscow."

"New sections of the iron curtain are being welded daily around additional segments of humanity, and we have no peace," Hickenlooper said. "Totalitarianism is again threatening the peace of the world as surely as it did in the 1930's."

In an address to the University of Iowa's centennial year commencement services, the Senator asserted:

"The one great nation of the world that retains its totalitarian government, Russia, and its satellite nations enslaved by the Soviet seizure, not only has refused to approach world-wide peace settlements on any basis of mutual cooperation or previously stated objectives of freedom, but, on the contrary, has thrown stumbling blocks in the path of agreements."

Hickenlooper said the Russian government "while indulging in procrastination and delay has carried on vigorously a policy of conquest and capture."

Girl Scout Due For Bronze Cross Award Tuesday

The first presentation of the Bronze Cross, highest national Girl Scout award for lifesaving, to a Washington Girl Scout will be made Tuesday morning to a Gordon Junior High School girl in ceremonies at the school, 35th and T sts. nw.

The recipient is Florita A. Flores, 14, of 1135 New Hampshire ave. nw.

She is credited with saving her father, Florencio Flores, and John D. Poole, a Washington Gas Light Co. employe, when they were overcome by gas fumes while repairing a leak in the basement of the Flores home.

Mrs. Adolphus Staton, commissioner of Washington Girl Scouts, will make the presentation and Dr. Hobart Corning, superintendent of schools, will participate in the special student assembly.

Navy to Get Descendant Of Historian

The Littlepages of Virginia and Washington have waited patiently three generations, exactly 90 years.

Now at last they have a family successor to Capt. Hardin Beverly Littlepage, Confederate navy.

His successor is Alvan Macauley Crews, 18, of 4335 Brandywine st. nw., a great-grandson, who will enter the Naval Academy this fall with the class of '51.

Captain Littlepage left the academy in April, 1861, just before he was to graduate. He resigned to follow his convictions and his native Virginia, which seceded from the Union.

He fought as commander of the 9-inch bow gun, port side, aboard the Confederate Merrimac-Virginia in its historic engagement with the Federal Monitor.

After the war he devoted his days to reconstructing the truth about the Merrimac—"the truth that has been crushed to earth by falsehood." He sought to prove it was not routed by the Northern ship on March 9, 1862, despite "a network of misstatements and falsehoods" to that effect.

As a postwar historian for the U. S. Navy, he pointed out the Merrimac, converted and ironprowed by the South, actually defeated the Monitor at Hampton Roads and forced it to withdraw to Fort Monroe.

With singular foresight the captain wrote that the guns of both ironsides "proclaimed in tones of thunder the death knell of the wooden ships, the birth of new iron navies."

The captain's twentieth century successor has had a few brushes with historical moments in his own right. He proudly recalls having opened the Senate doors to Mme. Chiang Kai-shek when she came to address that body in 1943.

But highlight of Crews' career as Senate page boy came when Senator Bilbo (D., Miss.) read out loud the youth's school history assignment during a Bilbo filibuster.

If Crews had been Army, not Navy-minded, his family could have provided him with an equally good precedent. Another forebear was Gen. Lewis Littlepage of Revolutionary War days.

This particular Littlepage was an American but served nine years in the cabinet of King Stanislaus of Poland. He lived only 39 years but found time to vie with Potemkin for the love of Catherine the Great, when not fighting in five wars or commanding troops in France and Spain, Russia and Poland.

2250 Middies in Nine Ships Sail on Cruise to Europe

Annapolis, Md., June 7 (AP).—Nine ships with 2250 midshipmen and 10 West Point graduates aboard steamed down Chesapeake Bay today on the Naval Academy's first summer training cruise to European waters since before the war.

It was something new to have the West Pointers aboard. It was also an innovation that the middies included some 200 men from Naval Reserve officer training units throughout the country.

They embarked from the academy seawall in a cold gray mist this morning, cheered by relatives and sweethearts who had come here for "June week" and yesterday's commencement exercises.

The academy band played "Roll Out the Barrel" as one group stowed their gear aboard big motor boats which shuttled them out 5 miles into the bay to board the aircraft carriers Randolph and Kearsage and the battleships Wisconsin and New Jersey.

Another contingent boarded the destroyers Cone, O'Hare, Stribling and Meredith at the seawall and these ships cleared by 8:15 a. m. for a rendezvous in the bay with the carriers and battleships. Ninth craft in the squadron was the dockship Fort Mandan.

First port of call is Rosyth, Scotland, where the squadron is due June 23.

U. S. Must Aid Sick Europe, Porter Says

New York, June 7 (AP).—Paul Porter, President Truman's former special envoy to Greece, said today that American foreign policy must strive for the twin objectives of "economic abundance for all, political freedom for all."

Porter told a luncheon-forum of the Liberal Party of New York State that he believed that it was in such interest that aid was being extended to Greece and Turkey, and that a "much broader program of European reconstruction" should follow.

"Food and fuel are our best weapons against totalitarianism," he said. "We will soon be throwing them into Greece. I hope that before too long we will be throwing them in tremendous volume into other parts of Europe. We will use them in favor of economic security and of political liberty."

"I firmly believe," he said, "that a successful American foreign policy can only be based on our democratic and liberty-loving traditions.

"The keystone in the structure of political freedom is the freedom from external aggression. . . . Thus, our first aim is to preserve the fabric of international amity and to secure all countries from external aggression. . . .

"The only fundamental way to combat the spread of totalitarianism is to combat the conditions which cause that spread—the conditions of want, hunger and economic chaos. People with empty stomache will clutch at any ideology that promises them food and security.

"Today we are faced with the symptoms of impending collapse in large areas of western Europe," Porter said. "Europe cannot be on its feet politically because it is not yet on its feet economically; and an investment in European economic and political stability, no matter how large that investment may be, will cost a good deal less than the cost of chaos and war.

"It will require a heroic effort on our part. But it is the only basis of a sound liberal policy. And it is the business of liberals to educate public opinion and rouse public demand so that the Administration may get the money and backing to carry out this policy."

Seven Croats to Die For Axis Collaboration

Belgrade, June 7 (INS).—The Yugoslav Supreme Court today sentenced the Croatian "Marshal" Slavko Kvaternik and six other Croats to be executed by a firing squad for treason through Axis collaboration.

Kvaternik and the others were cabinet aides of Ante Pavelic, the hunted ruler of the former Axis-created Croatian free state.

Bucknell Awards Honorary Degree To Mark Sullivan

Lewisburg, Pa., June 7 (A.P.).—Mark Sullivan, Washington newspaper columnist, today was awarded an honorary doctor of humane letters degree at Bucknell University commencement exercises.

Dr. Herbert L. Spencer, president of the university, in presenting the degree cited Sullivan "for his keen analysis and interpretation of national and world news."

"One of America's foremost writers and thinkers," Dr. Spencer told Sullivan, "you are performing a most important service for your fellow countrymen. At a time when we need to see clearly the real meaning of events as they occur you are using your brilliant mind to evaluate for us the true significance of the news of the world."

Brazil Prepares Invitation to Truman

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, June 7 (U.P.).—The Brazilian government is making preparations to invite President Truman to visit this country, it was authoritatively reported today.

A foreign office spokesman said that "the purpose of the Brazilian government is to invite President Truman to come to this country but thus far the invitation has not been formally extended."

Austrian Red Demands New Government

Vienna, June 7 (AP).—A high government official declared today that a leading Austrian Communist had demanded a new Communist-controlled regime in this country, with the threat that the Soviet Union would never sign a peace treaty with the present moderate cabinet.

The official said that Ernst Fischer, one of the four Communists in the Austrian Parliament, had offered complete support of his party and "generous assistance from Russia" for a new government empowered to rule four years without parliamentary restrictions.

The official, who could not be quoted by name, said that Fischer warned also of "serious repercussions" if "western orientation" continued unchanged in Austria. Western diplomats expressed considerable concern, in view of the pattern of Soviet pressure as disclosed in recent developments in Hungary and Bulgaria.

Proposal Turned Down

Despite the warning, the proposal, made to two members of the Austrian cabinet, was turned down, he official said. High government officials said they expect a colder and more unyielding attitude on the part of Russia toward the Austrian republic as an immediate result.

(American Government officials in Washington said the United States Government was prepared to abandon Austrian peace-making efforts and keep American troops in Austria indefinitely if necessary to prevent a Communist coup.)

Fischer, a recognized spokesman for the Communists in Vienna, made his offer at a small dinner party given on Thursday by Kristovic Binder, member of the People's Party and head of the trade section of the chamber of commerce, the official said.

Apparently Plan Offensive

The informant said the Austrian Communists apparently hoped to "go on the offensive" in Austria as they have in Hungary, and were trying to find influential Austrians who would go along with them.

For several weeks the Communists have been campaigning in the press for a change in the present government, which came into power in the fall of 1945 after an election in which the Communists received less than 10 per cent of the votes.

The present chancellor is Leopold Figl, head of the People's Party, which has the support of many Catholics and most of the peasants in Austria. The government is a coalition of all three parties—People's, Socialist and Communist. Socialist Karl Renner is president.

In addition to telling the cabinet members that "when Austria wants a treaty the only way to get it is to change the present government," Fischer demanded also the removal of Foreign Minister Karl Gruber, a member of the People's Party, and Interior Minister Helmer, a Socialist.

Keep Messersmith, Say Argentine Papers

Buenos Aires, June 7 (AP).—The Standard, an English-language newspaper, said today the United States would gain nothing by sacrificing U. S. Ambassador George Messersmith "on the altar of Spruille Braden's ego." Its editorial urged rejection of Messersmith's resignation as American envoy.

Pro-government newspapers in Argentina have expressed unanimously the opinion that the withdrawal of Messersmith was an unfriendly gesture.

Franco's Succession Plan Is Ratified

Madrid, June 7 (INS).—The Spanish Parliament in Madrid unanimously approved tonight Generalissimo Franco's succession plan.

The plan provides for the formation of a regency council and the eventual enthronement of a king if Franco dies or is incapacitated.

Any new king would have to be a member of the Spanish royal family, be more than 30 years old, a Catholic, and accept the "fundamental laws" of the Franco regime.

Rep. Hobbs to Speak

Representative Sam Hobbs (D., Ala.) will discuss the Federal Loyalty Program at a supper meeting of the Federal Club at 6 p. m. tomorrow at the Willard Hotel.

U. N. May Take Axis Nations

Lake Success, June 7 (AP).—Early admission of former Axis states to the United Nations was considered today as a possible step toward preventing a repetition of the Hungarian coup in other former enemy countries.

Many U. N. delegates here expected a drive to admit Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria and other defeated countries just as soon as the four major powers ratify treaties with the former Axis states.

There were indications that Britain and the United States, particularly, feel it would be advisable to get the tamed Axis countries inside the U. N. immediately where their governments would be in a position to deal directly with all other members on an equal basis.

The United States policy thus far has been that Italy, Hungary and other former enemy countries should be brought into the United Nations immediately after the treaties have been ratified.

A step in this direction was taken this week when the United States ratified the Hungarian treaty. Hungary and Italy have applied for U. N. membership.

It was uncertain whether the United States would continue to recognize the Hungarian government but American sources here took the view that it would be better to have Hungary inside the United Nations even if the government does not represent the Hungarian majority.

Petkov Accused of Plotting To Overthrow Sofia Regime

Sofia, Bulgaria, June 7 (U.P.)—Nikola Petkov, Communist opponent who was arrested Thursday night, was charged by the public prosecutor today with participating in a 23-month conspiracy to overthrow the government by organizing Bulgarian army officers into an illegal military organization.

In a letter to the Bulgarian Parliament, the prosecutor said that evidence obtained in the recent military trial of officers for conspiracy implicated Petkov with the plot against the government beginning in July, 1945.

The prosecutor said that Petkov not only succeeded in organizing a conspiracy among some officers but also was in contact with Ivan Mihailov, allegedly the leader of a band of international Macedonian "terrorists."

Mihailov was described by the prosecutor as a lieutenant of Dr. Ante Pavelich, the Croatian quisling. Mihailov is believed to be in Italy.

Petkov, leader of the Agrarian National Union Party which opposed the Communist-dominated government of Premier Georgi Dimitrov, was said by the prosecutor to have been implicated in the plot by the leader of the conspiracy, Gen. Ivan Popo. According to the prosecutor, Popo said he became a victim of Petkov.

The prosecutor said Petkov had close connections with high-ranking Bulgarian army officers who were close collaborators of Peter Koev, a former deputy, who will go on trial next Wednesday. Further accusations against Petkov are expected to be made during the Koev trial.

In a press conference, Bulgarian Press Director Vladimir Topehcharov said that there was no evidence of an "organizational connection" between the alleged Hungarian plot resulting in the ouster of former Hungarian Premier Ferenc Nagy and the alleged Bulgarian plot.

Romanian Leaders in Belgrade To Visit With Tito, Albanians

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, June 7 (U.P.)—Romanian Premier Petru Groza and four cabinet ministers arrived in Belgrade today to join high Albanian government officials in a three-day "visit of friendship" with Marshal Tito and Yugoslav officials.

The Romanians came by train and were welcomed at the station by Tito, several Yugoslav cabinet ministers and members of the diplomatic corps.

Included in the Romanian group were Minister of National Economy Gheorche Gheorchin-Dej, Minister of Culture Stefan Voitec, Minister of Foreign Affairs Gheorghe Tatarescu and Secretary of the Council of Ministers Emil Bodnarash.

An Albanian economic mission that arrived in Belgrade yesterday included Chairman of the Economic Council Mako Spiru, Minister of Trade Gogo Kusi, and Head of Foreign Trade Miazi Demi.

Official sources said the visit of the Romanians will last three days. The program includes a reception by the Yugoslavs on Sunday and one by the Romanian Embassy on Monday. It was announced that Groza will hold a press conference on Monday.

Reports from Prague that Russian Lieut. Gen. V. P. Sviridov, Soviet commander in Hungary, had left Budapest for Belgrade yesterday could not be confirmed. Sviridov was not known to be in Belgrade.

rescue operations were continuing.

Enough typhoid vaccine to immunize 2200 persons was flown here from Des Moines.

There were other stricken areas, too, and forecasts of more flooding to come.

A major flood on the Mississippi River, bordering Iowa on the east, was predicted for Monday by the Weather Bureau in Des Moines. The expected danger spot was the stretch from Keokuk, Iowa, to Quincy, Ill., and Hannibal, Mo.

The Mississippi was expected to reach stages of about a foot to a foot and a half higher than the disastrous 1944 floods. Stages of 24 to 25 feet were forecast for Quincy and Hannibal Monday and Tuesday, and 20 to 21 feet at Keokuk.

Already the Mississippi had flooded a third of Canton, Mo., and driven at least 600 persons from their homes, the Red Cross reported.

At Gregory, S. Dak., a woman helping her husband push their stalled car after a near cloudburst Friday night was swept to her death in the flash flood of a nearby creek.

Boy, 2, Critically Hurt In Fall From Window

Two-year-old Spencer Barker was critically injured yesterday when he fell about 15 feet from a second-story window at his home, 38 Rhode Island ave. nw.

At Sibley Hospital, where he was taken by his mother, Mrs. Pauline Barker, it was said he suffered a fractured skull. He had landed on concrete steps.

Premier Sees Election Need In Hungary

Budapest, June 7 (AP).—Hungary's new pro-Communist premier, Lajos Dinnyes, held his first news conference today, and announced that new elections "will be necessary."

[The United Press quoted Dinnyes as declaring that his government intends to "develop the closest collaboration with Soviet Russia" and that "nobody can withdraw that right from us."

[Dinnyes said Hungary was prepared to go before the United Nations to answer any questions on its change of government.]

Dinneys' press conference lasted for almost two hours, with a slight break for cocktails and sandwiches, and at the end of the questioning by about 100 reporters the premier was still in good humor though he remarked "Ferenc Nagy was never questioned like this."

Former Premier Nagy resigned last week.

The day brought these other developments:

1. The British sent a second sharp request to the Russian commander in Budapest asking copies of documents allegedly linking Nagy to a plot to overthrow the Hungarian Republic.

2. A reliable Hungarian source said that more than 200 Hungarians, many of them former resistance fighters against the Germans, had been seized by the Communist police and held for questioning since Nagy's resignation.

3. The text of an alleged confession by Bela Kovacs, former Smallholder Party secretary, was released today by the official MTI Hungarian News Agency. The alleged confession disclosed details of what the Communists called a plot against the government.

4. Reports from Vienna quoted refugee Smallholders leaders as saying an emigre Hungarian government was being formed.

At his press conference today Dinnyes said the date of new elections depended on "political developments at home," and probably would be "before harvest"—some time in September.

Dinnyes also declared "there will be no elections unless there are separate (party lists. A single list is not an election."

(The single, or bloc, list often has been employed by Communists to prearrange the apportionment of places on the single, or government, ticket among the various parties.)

The Premier declared the Hungarian Minister to Washington, Aladar Szegedy-Maszak, had refused to return to Hungary because of "false reports in the American press."

Asked to specify any false reports, Dinnyes spoke at length with his interpreter who finally replied that Dinnyes referred to reports there was terror in Hungary, and that "hundreds" of persons in Hungary had been arrested.

Asked if the Hungarian Minister could have received some reports through the American State Department, the premier only shrugged.

Dinnyes was asked if the political parties of the country would be suppressed in the coming election. With a heavy sigh the premier replied, "That is quite a question."

British Maj. Gen. O. P. Edgcumbe's request for the Russian documents involving Nagy was made after the Russian commandant, Lieut. Gen. V. P. Sviridov, had replied to a previous inquiry that the documents already had been turned over to the Hungarian government and were not accessible.

Edgcumbe wanted to know why the Hungarian government could not be asked to produce the papers.

The newspaper Szabadsag, attacked Szegedy-Maszak, who, resigning as minister to Washington, bitterly denounced the coup in Hungary. The newspaper charged that Szegedy-Maszak smuggled out of Hungary and to the United States $2,500,000 belonging to his wife's family.

(In Washington, Szegedy-Maszak said "the whole story is absurd." He said he and his wife brought no more money to Washington than was given them by the foreign office for official use.")

In his news conference, Dinnyes charged that Nagy had engaged in "violent and terroristic measures" while he was premier. Pressed to be specific, he said the former premier had been "intoxicated with the effects of victory" in the November, 1945 elections in which his Small Landholders Party won a 57 per cent majority.

[Dinnyes replying to a question, said:

["The crisis was brought about by a revolt of a majority of the small holders against the dictatorial tactics of Nagy and Varga (Bela Varga, former speaker of Parliament. At no time did Nagy offer to refute or answer the charges against him now under consideration by the public prosecutor."]

[The text of Kovacs' alleged confession said, according to the United Press, that small holders party leaders:

[1. Approved connections between the smallholders party and an alleged emigre Hungarian army in the British zone of Austria.

[2. Joined a secret anti-government, anti-Soviet underground in August, 1946.

[3. In March, 1946, planned arming an illegal army in western Hungary "on which the armed forces of the party counted in the fight for power."

[4. Placed conspirators in party headquarters.

[5. Discussed the possibility of forming a "Hungarian counter-government-in-exile."

[At Washington State Department officials said the "confession" "obviously was dictated by Russia."

Takoma Park Man Kills Self After Shooting Estranged Wife

FIGURES IN SHOOTING—Edmund Windsor, Takoma Park house painter, and his estranged wife, Edna

A Takoma Park house painter yesterday shot his estranged wife in the face near their Clifton Park, Md., home, and then fatally wounded himself with the same small-bore rifle.

The husband, Edmund Windsor, 46, died at Washington Sanitarium at 9:55 a. m., three hours after he had shot himself above the right ear with a .22 caliber rifle. Dr. F. J. Broschart, Montgomery County medical examiner, issued a certificate of suicide.

At the same sanitarium, in "good" condition last night, was his wife, Mrs. Edna Windsor, 44, of 8857 Piney Branch rd., just outside Silver Spring, Md. Physicians said she was shot below the right jaw, the bullet emerging through the upper lip.

Mrs. Windsor told police her husband shot her as she was turning to run from him "after he said he'd kill me." Falling to the pavement after the shot, she said, she heard her husband reloading the single-shot rifle even as she stumbled to her feet and ran to a neighbor, L. M. LaRue, of 8855 Piney Branch rd.

An automobile and a truck passed by at that moment and she was not fired upon again. A second shot, however, was heard before she reached the LaRues', and it was this shot, detectives said, that killed the husband. He was found with the rifle at his feet.

A son of the couple, Frank L. Windsor, 26, who is married and lives at 9625 Sligo Creek Pkwy., Silver Spring, told police his mother and father had been separated "several" times.

Red Writer Assails U. S. Foreign Policy

Moscow, June 7 (U.P.).—New Times, the leading Russian magazine on foreign affairs, said today that British-Soviet cooperation could not be strengthened as long as Britain followed American foreign policy.

"Interference in the affairs of other peoples, violation of the sovereignty of other states in order to support the forces of reaction, moral and material support of Fascist and Fascist-type regimes, orientation towards a bloc with the new pretenders to world domination—such policy does not answer the interests of democracy or the tasks of constructing an enduring peace," New Times said.

"Insofar as English foreign policy follows this course, it enters inevitably into contradiction with declarations about the desire to strengthen Anglo-Soviet relations.

"It is impossible to serve two masters simultaneously—the cause of peace and democracy on one side and the desire of American and English monopolies for world hegemony on the other."

New Times said there were no irreconcilable differences between Britain and Russia and that cooperation between them was "necessary and possible."

The article discussed the British-Russian wartime treaty of friendship and assistance and attempts to extend its duration 50 years instead of 20.

Nagy Ridicules Soviet Charges

foresaw a period of tranquility ahead for Hungary.

He was at Locarno on May 28 when he received a telephone call from Budapest saying that the acting chairman of the Allied Control Commission, Lieut. Gen. V. P. Sviridov, had rejected his request that Bela Kovacs, secretary general of the Small Holders Party, be turned over to the Hungarian government.

Kovacs was under arrest on charges of complicity in the alleged plot. Bela Varga, speaker of Parliament, also among the accused government officials, fled Budapest.

Nagy never learned what was the fate of Varga and Kovacs. "I don't know," he said, "but if they are dead, I am personally very, very sorry, because they were dear friends of mine."

Nagy said the Russian refusal t ohand over Kovacs was based on the contention that the investigation had not been completed. He said he was given to understand that he, himself, was accused of having had knowledge of the activities of those on the Russians' list.

The same day he received the call from Budapest, a meeting of the Hungarian cabinet was held, and he was requested to return. He agreed to return at once, saying, however, that the accusations against him were "without foundation and ridiculous."

Nagy

He telephoned President Tildy the following morning "and he also asked me to return and added an assurance that things could be put right."

He continued:

"I already had one foot on the running board of my motor when our minister asked me to come to the telephone.

"The minister said that personal friends had rung him up and said that under no circumstances should I leave Switzerland.

Palestine Dispute Flares at World Socialist Meeting

Zurich, Switzerland, June 7 (U.P.).—The International Socialist Conference, which delegates from 19 countries are attending, threatened to run aground last night in the first meeting because of an argument betwen the British and Palestinian representatives.

Mrs. Colda Meyerson, chief delegate for Palestine, demanded that the Palestine question should be discussed by the full conference. Margon Phillips of Britain insisted that it should not.

The question will be reconsidered tomorrow.

Primary issues are whether to revise the Second Socialist International and whether to admit the German Social Democratic party to future international missions.

Stalin Doctrine Shaping Up

and it is believed she will reject the American request for a joint Russian-Anglo-American inquiry into conditions in Hungary."]

[Hungarian sources in Paris said today that Hungary must be "written off," temporrally at least, as a positive factor in the contest between European Communists and anti-Communists. They predicted that the new government, with the Communist Vice Premier Matyas Rakosi as virtual dictator, would encounter underground resistance from "about half the population," but they said there was no possibility of actually ousting the new regime.

The Communist coup, they said, was the direct result of the course of events taken in Europe since President Truman first announced the loans to Greece and Turkey.

A similar procedure in Austria seemingly would not be so easy. The country is not occupied by Russia alone, but by three other powers, the United States, Britain and France.

This point was punctuated by Washington dispatches quoting authoritative sources as saying the United States Government was prepared to abandon peace-making efforts in Austria and keep occupation troops in the country indefinitely to prevent a Communist grab.

Regardless of what may happen in Austria, however, the long-rumored Soviet-sponsored "Balkan federation" may be regarded as an accomplished fact, regardless of whether it is ever formally organized and proclaimed.

In Italy and France the Communists lately have been squeezed out of the governments.

Many observers believe that Italy may be the next objective in a frontal Communist attack. Communist demonstrations are regarded as the first skirmishes. All week the Communists and De Gasperi's Christian Democrats have been engaged in clashes at Florence over control of the Confederation of Labor. Today Giuseppe di Vittorio, 53-year-old Communist, emerged at the helm as general secretary. Heretofore, Socialists and Christian Democrats have shared equally in the labor leadership. Now they must take a backseat.

If the rumors are true about the formation of armed Communists underground in northern Italy, another coup on Hungarian lines cannot be ruled out as a possibility.

But if the Communists have gained ground in Italy, they have lost ground—and a lot of it—in France.

A French political expert who is in a position to know estimated that the French Communist Party has been shorn of at least one million adherents within the past two months, out of a probable peak total of some five million.

There has been no general strike in France, but there has been an endless series of individual strikes. The Communists ordered some of the strikes. Government officials say they instigated others.

A general strike might have resulted in catapulting Gen. Charles de Gaulle, the Communists' chief enemy, into outright power. But the series of smaller strikes also appears to have boomeranged.

Palestine-Bound Plane Makes Third Start

New York, June 7 (U.P.).—A four-motored Trans-World airliner which was forced back to LaGuardia Field twice yesterday by mechanical troubles took off shortly before noon today for Lydda, Palestine.

Most of the 36 passengers aboard were staff members of the United Nations commission investigating conditions in Palestine.

3 Killed by Train

Monmouth, Calif., June 7 (U.P.).—The southbound Santa Fe streamliner ran into an automobile here today, killing at least three persons and injuring one or two others, railroad officials reported.

U. N. Law Body Urged

A new United Nations lawmaking body, with courts to interpret its international laws and power to enforce them, was advocated here yesterday by Sir Carl Berendsen, Minister of New Zealand.

Berendsen

Sir Carl, who addressed the luncheon meeting of the Section of International and Comparative Law of the American Bar Association, was introduced by Willard Cowles of New York, chairman, as an authority whose name is on a number of treatises on international law.

Our most conspicuous lack in international law, the Minister told the 125 persons assembled at the Mayflower Hotel, is that of "one single source" for such legislation. While there is no reason why we shouldn't make the U. N. a source, he continued, the General Assembly and the Security Council could not serve, due not only to the veto power but also to their voting procedure.

Sir Carl said it would be "ridiculous" for a country the size of his, for instance, to have as much voting power as the United States in making international laws. The voting in such a body should be "weighted," he emphasized, not only for relative population of the participating nations, but also for "imponderable factors" such as records of past adherence to the rule of law.

The speaker, who was New Zealand's Secretary for External Affairs for many years, declared collective security is impossible under the veto power retained by the members of the UN.

The American Law Institute, concluding its 24th annual meeting at the Mayflower yesterday, will continue its study of a proposed commercial code, jointly with the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

Mystery Death Of Bakirdjis Moves Greeks

By M. W. Fodor
Post Reporter

Athens, June 7.—Great commotion was caused and deep regret was felt in nonextremist quarters in Athens at the sudden death of Gen. Euripides Bakirdjis, one of the finest military brains of Greece, who died recently under mysterious circumstances in exile on one of the barren islands whereto he was exiled by the present regime. Like Mussolini used the Lipari Islands as a concentration camp for political opponents, the late Premier Metaxas used such barren islands as a temporary detention camp for political opponents. So does the present regime.

Gen. Euripides Bakirdjis, as most of the generals of republican regimes in Greece, was educated at St. Cyr and other high French military schools. He told me that some famous French generals, and especially one who is by no means considered as a progressive, were among his personal friends. Eleuthorios Venizelos, the great premier of republican days before the war, promoted Bakirdjis to general. When the Royalist premier, John Metaxis, came to power, he wanted to send Bakirdjis to the islands, but the general escaped and lived, in exile, in Romania.

Head of Resistance

During the war he returned to Greece and became the head of the Greek resistance movement in the mountains.

This writer had an opportunity to have a long talk with Bakirdjis on November 29, 1944, a few days before the outbreak of the civil war in Greece. Bakirdjis then was commander of Elas (the National Liberation Army) in Macedonia, with Salonika as his headquarters. I am accompanied by a prominent British journalist, Colonel Markos (better known as Gen. Markos Vafthiades, the Soviet-sponsored leader of the present Greek guerilla forces in the mountains), who was then a political commissar in Salonika and was present during the conversation. Bakirdjis was a man of great integrity and courage. Completely ignoring the Soviet spy's presence, he talked very freely to your correspondent (in French).

The general told me that on November 7, 1944, a band of Bulgarians, consisting of students of Sofia University and some Bulgar former soldiers, broke into Greece. "I immediately engaged them in a fight with my Elas forces," said Bakirdjis, "and succeeded in throwing them out of the country."

Always Grave Danger

Bakirdjis then permitted me to see the 500 Bulgarian prisoners captured in this engagement in Macedonia. They were kept under joint British-Elas guard in the Pavlo Melas concentration camp.

"The two Slav neighbors in the north (meaning Yugoslavia and Bulgaria) were always a grave danger to us," said Bakirdjis. "Formerly they at least were at loggerheads. Now they are friends."

Then he added gravely:

"As long as I live, Elas will jealously guard the national frontiers of Greece."

This great Greek patriot died in the middle of May in his island exile. Greek papers stated that he committed suicide. His friends who knew him well say Bakirdjis was not the kind of person who would commit suicide. Greek quarters interested in the mystery of his death believe that our mission coming to Greece ought to investigate the circumstances of Bakirdjis' death.

Archbishop Selected

Vatican City, June 7 (U.P.).—Pope Pius XII today appointed Msgr. Maurice Roy, Bishop of Three Rivers, Que., as Archbishop of Quebec to succeed the late Cardinal Villeneuve.

Beattie Elected President Of Junior Board of Trade

James S. Beattie, President | Jesse H. Ott, 1st V. P. | Cal H. Aurand, 2d V. P.

Newly elected officers of the Junior Board of Commerce

James S. Beattie, local advertising executive, has been elected president of the Washington Junior Board of Commerce for the 1947-48 term, the Jaycee elections committee announced yesterday.

He will assume the office July 1, succeeding L. W. Lawder.

A native Washingtonian, Beattie attended E. V. Brown Grammar School, Western High School and George Washington University here. As a naval officer from 1943 to 1945, he served with the Atlantic and Pacific fleets and participated in the Philippine invasions.

Jesse H. Ott, insurance manager for the Leo M. Bernstein Real Estate Co., was elected first vice president in charge of external affairs.

Cal H. Aurand, assistant general passenger agent for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad here, was named second vice president in charge of internal affairs.

Lloyd B. Gruman, jr., executive secretary of the Heating, Piping and Air Conditioning Contractors D. C. Association, was elected secretary.

Marshall to Advocate Admission of DPs

By the United Press

Secretary of State George C. Marshall and possibly two other Cabinet officers will appear before the House Judiciary Committee to plead for approval of a bill to admit 40,000 displaced persons into the United States, it was learned tonight.

The bill now is being studied by a judiciary subcommittee, most of whose members have indicated opposition to the measure in its present form.

Law Summer Session Has Big Enrollment

The National University's School of Law has its heaviest enrollment for a summer session since Pearl Harbor, Mrs. Alice K. Conner, registrar, said yesterday.

Classes, which begin tomorrow, are open to beginning students or undergraduates. Registration will be open for a few days, Mrs. Conner said, at her office at 1225 New York ave. nw.

Russian Entry Is 'Dreaded' In Free India

New Delhi, June 7 (AP).—Observers here fear that if Hindu or Moslem leaders of India when it is free, put too much pressure on the Maharaja of Kashmir, he may shout for Russian help.

Such a development would give Russia a wedge between Hindustan and Pakistan, where the British have least desired the Russians to be.

C. P. Ramaswamy Aiyer, the dewan of Travancore state, has declared he anticipates a Russian infiltration and "dreads it."

But this is only one of India's new problems. For instance, until the preliminary steps of division are taken some sort of cabinet commission will be forced to administer the army, the railroads, telephone and telegraph systems, postal department, irrigation systems, currency, and the national debt.

Almost none of these problems will be solved by August 15, the target date for division of the country.

No Summer Retreat

A divided India will offer some strange contrasts.

In the eastern half of Pakistan, which will be made up of a portion of Bengal Province, there is no cool retreat among the hills to which the people can flee—unless they get passports—to escape the boiling heat of the lower Ganges.

Hindustan will have a virtual monopoly not only on their own shrines, but on Moslem shrines as well, giving the Hindus the most of the tourist business.

The famous Moslem shrine of Taj Mahal is in Agra, deep in Hindustan. The tomb of Akbar the Great, Mogul Emperor of Hindustan, is near Agra.

All of Delhi is a Moslem shrine, for it was here the Moguls built their capitals and huge mosques and piled up vast reservoirs of gold and jeweled wealth made India a prize for European nations for hundreds of years.

Pakistan will have a good cash crop of jute to exchange for beautiful and useful commodities from the United States and elsewhere. However, jute is manufactured into finished goods in Calcutta, which lies in Hindustan, and Pakistan will probably have to build its own processing plants.

Pakistan Lacks Tigers

Pakistan will have the biggest granaries of India in Sind and Punjab, and considerable raw materials, but will lack industrial and financial resources comparable to Hindustan's.

Perhaps the worst blow of all is that Pakistan will have almost no tigers and even fewer elephants. Eastern Bengal has a few tigers, but most of the elephants are either in the far south or in the Assam jungles of the far northeast, which will be cut away from Pakistan.

The rich state of Hyderabad, where a Moslem ruler is overlord of a population 85 per cent Hindu, presents another perplexing problem.

The Nizam of Hyderabad has not indicated whether he will collaborate with Pakistan or with the Hindu part of India by which he is almost surrounded. Hindu nationalists expect to have him shaken from his throne within a few years.

They don't think he will get out of India with all of his fabulous wealth. Its extent is indicated by the fact that 20 years ago a truck load of gold was hauled into his palace compound. It is still standing there under a single guard, with the truck buried to the axles as it sinks into the earth with the passage of the years.

Legion Post Holds Memorial Mass, Breakfast Today

The annual memorial mass of the James Cardinal Gibbons Post, Catholic War Veterans, will be held at 8 a. m. today in Holy Trinity Church, 36th and O sts. nw. Mass celebrant will be the Rev. Hugh A. McCarrom.

At a breakfast in the church hall after the mass the speaker will be the Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, new pastor of Holy Trinity Church.

David J. Bowman, D. C. department commander of the Catholic War Veterans, will make awards to William Hickey, sr., 82, oldest living member of the CWV, for services in the Spanish-American War; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Trilling, whose son, Victor A. Trilling, was the only member of Our Lady of Victory parish killed in action in World War II; and James Murphy, who recruited the greatest number of men for the CWV.

Train Kills Woman And Grandson in Arms

West Palm Beach, Fla., June 7 (AP).—A deaf grandmother failed to see an onrushing train until too late here today and died with her 2-year-old grandson in her arms.

Mrs. E. L. Housley, 71, was crossing the Seaboard Airline Railway tracks, followed by her grandson, Sherwood Haines, in a scooter. As the engine bore down on them, Mrs. Housley looked up in terror to snatch the child from his scooter. She clasped him in her arms, turned twice in confusion and stood transfixed, witnesses said an instant later they died together.

Strike Empties Paris Tracks

History's Foremost Red Took Dim View Of Russian Integrity in Foreign Policy

An attack upon Russian foreign policy by the foremost Communist figure in world history is quoted in the June issue of "Freedom & Union," published by Clarence Streit's "Federal Union, Inc." The magazine goes on sale this week.

Russians are criticized as "tricky, very subtle, very shrewd and resourceful." The country is described as being "obstinately and deeply attached to certain fixed ideas," but it is asserted that "as soon as the other powers resist in a determined and united way they will find Russia will accept a modest retreat."

The Russian policies assailed are those of the 1850s. The Communist is Karl Marx, one-time London correspondent of the New York Tribune. The quotations are from the eight-volume Marxian work, "The Eastern Question," written around 1853, and they have been assembled by Ahmet Emin Yalman of the Turkish daily Vatan.

Views Have Currency

Yalman ascribes to Marx some of the following startlingly current observations on Eastern issues:

"The conflict between Russian despotism and Western democracy seems to be everlasting in the Balkans. Those who are working for the survival of democracy in Europe must introduce European arts, sciences, justice, liberty and the spirit of independence into the Balkans. Future peace and the progress of humanity are closely allied. Those who wish a good harvest must till the ground and choose the seeds with care.

". . . From time to time Russia pretends that it has no evil intentions against this or that nation, but merely wishes to protect it. Humanity should be on its guard against claims of protection on the part of Russia. Did they not claim to be the protectors of Poland at one time?

". . . Russia keeps claiming that it has no annexionist designs. In order to ascertain the hypocrisy of this claim it is sufficient to review the annexations carried out by Russia since the time of Peter the Great . . . Territories obtained in Europe by Russia during the last 60 years are as large as the entire Russian possessions in Europe 60 years ago.

U. S. Role Examined

". . . And as sure as conquest follows conquest, and annexation follows annexation, so surely would the conquest of Turkey by Russia be only the prelude for the annexation of Hungary, Prussia, Galicia, and for the ultimate realization of a Slavonic empire which certain fanatical Panslavistic philosophers have dreamed of.

". . . It is a remarkable fact that the first mark of interest taken by the United States in European affairs concerns the Eastern question. They are becoming aware that there are reasons why Constantinople constitutes the dividing issue in the conflict between East and West. One should not forget that America is the youngest and the most vigorous exponent of western civilization.

". . . Will the Byzantinism represented by Russia yield to western civilization, or will it one day find an opportunity to renew its pernicious influence in forms more terrible and more tyrannical than ever?"

From these and other quotations, Yalman concludes that "no man could be less a Marxist in the present Russian sense than Karl Marx himself."

Regimentation Hit by Braden

Butte, Mont., June 7 (INS).—Retiring Assistant Secretary of State Spruille Braden keynoted his valedictory as an American diplomat tonight with the warning that "the world today is still lagrely rigged for war."

"Our job is to rig it for peace," he told the graduating class of the Montana School of Mines.

The hard-hitting Braden condemned totalitarianism and regimentation in no uncertain terms. He said free enterprise was the only salvation of the world, adding:

"Given freedom under law, men will provide for themselves. Take away that freedom and they lose everything, including the economic security and well-being for which that freedom was ostensibly surrendered."

He laid down this thesis for an American approach to an uncertain future:

"Our national attitude today, as always in the past, demands self-discipline, free choice and individual opportunity and admires the adventurous spirit they serve . . .

"Our national ideal, innately as strong today as ever, is not the equality of prisoners under the regimentation of the almighty state, but the equality of opportunity that goes with freedom and requires the state to serve no greater purpose than to protect that freedom."

Reds Take Key Town on Way to Dairen

Peiping, June 7 (AP).—Chinese Communist occupation of Pulantien, key overland approach to Soviet-held Dairen and Port Arthur, was reported today by both sides in the Chinese civil war.

The exact circumstances of this development were in dispute, but it was expected to have an important bearing on the future of Dairen and Port Arthur, on which a Chinese government commission now is negotiating with the Russians.

Pulantien is on the Mukden Railway 45 miles northeast of Dairen and 70 miles northeast of Port Arthur. Progovernment press reports said yesterday that after sitting there for months, a government garrison had "completed its mission" and withdrawn.

Today the progovernment paper Hsin Min Pao said the Communist Eleventh Division had moved in and that the government withdrawal followed Communist dynamiting of bridges 20 miles farther north, threatening to trap the government forces.

Under the Soviet-Chinese treaty of 1945, Russia is entitled to a naval base at Port Arthur, while Dairen is to be a free commercial port, but both are to be under Chinese civil administration. These terms never have been fulfilled, the Russians having held onto both cities since the Japanese surrender.

(Writing from Nanking, Associated Press Correspondent Harold K. Milks said political observers in that capital detected a "stiffening of the Chinese government's attitude toward the Soviets," and that while the government intended to live up to the 30-year treaty of 1945, "the patience of the Chinese people is wearing thin as the result of repeated delays

81 YEARS OF RELIABILITY

Atom-Driven Generators Seen in 5 Years

Lake Success, N. Y., June 7 (U.P.).—Atomic power to drive the world's generators probably will be demonstrated in less than five years, it was revealed today.

Oppenheimer

That first demonstration of new power will be followed in about 10 years by the application of nuclear energy to specific tasks.

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, professor of physics at the California Institute of Technology and one of the Nation's outstanding authorities on atomic research, told the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission recently that the entire field of nuclear energy is rapidly opening up before the concentrated investigation of the world's scientists.

Most Optimistic Estimate

His estimate was the most optimistic that has yet been made by physicists who must do the actual work of solving atomic energy problems.

Oppenheimer's talk to the commission was released today by Albin E. Johnson, U. S. representative on the commission.

Oppenheimer said it would take about 30 to 50 years before "atomic power can in any substantial way supplement the general power resources of the world.

"That is under the assumption that development is pushed, that intelligent and resourceful people work on the job, that money is available for it."

He told the commission that "it does not seem to me very profitable to forbid thinking about atomic explosives" in attempting to solve the problem of controlling the atom.

Would Limit Prohibition

"I believe that the prohibition should be limited to those activities which require the possession of significant quantities of nuclear fuel," he said.

"I do not think that general staffs can be prevented from brooding about targets to bombard, carriers to carry the bombs, fuses, or anything like that.

"Knowledge about atomic explosives is . . . more dangerous if not disseminated than it is if disseminated.

"The possibilities of keeping secrets in this field are in any case so remote, if one has an international understanding, that one should plan for a systematic program of dissemination and education."

Oppenheimer told the commission that beginners in the field of atomic energy had the experience of "being rather disappointed that the so-called . . . peaceful uses, seemed so extremely vague and so conjectural, compared to the very immediate application in the form of atomic weapons."

He explained the reason for that feeling was the tremendous problem of research and development involved.

"We do not know how to do things that we know we want to do," he said.

Oppenheimer said he favored international cooperation as against purely national systems, where he felt "various nations may all be keeping the same secrets from each other."

He concluded that "no proposals predicted on forbidding inquiry and learning . . . survive" in the highly competitive field.

Early Big 3 Parley Urged

London, June 7 (U.P.).—Britain's new Commonwealth Atomic Energy committee today appealed to Prime Minister Attlee to take the initiative in arranging an early meeting of the Big Three to settle the problem of atomic control.

A letter signed by 17 prominent Britons, including two noted nuclear scientists, and 12 members of Parliament, pointed out that the race for atomic energy becomes ever more urgent."

The committee underlined its warning by reminding Attlee that 12 countries are engaged in government-sponsored programs of atomic research and development and 17 countries are mining uranium and thorium.

Only a meeting among President Truman, Premier Joseph Stalin and Attlee can break the deadlock, the committee said.

"The minimum basis of mutual confidence necessary for adoption and working of an effective control scheme . . . is rapidly disappearing," the letter said.

Hospital Receives 558 More Tokens

Children's Hospital yesterday received 558 more outdated streetcar and bus tokens, which were redeemed by Capital Transit Co. for $46.50. Cash amounting to $8.45 accompanied the token donations.

Since The Post's District Line column suggested that invalidated tokens be turned over to the hospital, 23,310 tokens worth $1942.50 have been received. Cash donations total $440.52.

Argentine Strike Ends

Buenos Aires, June 7 (AP).—Street cleaners and garbage collectors who had been on strike since May 22 returned to work this afternoon after President Juan D. Peron had intervened to end the walkout by obtaining pay increases.

Full Schedule B-36 Bomber Output Begins

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Fort Worth, Tex., June 7.—Full-scale production of giant B-36 bombers has begun here under a schedule that will give the Army Air Forces 100 of the globe raiders within two years.

AAF and Consolidated Vultee officials have revealed that the production models will contain these notable improvements over the experimental version of the six-engined, 139-ton bomber:

1. New type landing gear permitting operation of the craft—at least on a limited scale—from many American airfields. The great weight of the XB-36 can be handled now by only three U. S. fields.

2. Increased range, beginning with the fourteenth production model. This will give the B-36, it was said, the ability to carry 10,000 pounds of bombs 10,000 miles or 36 tons a distance of 4000 miles. First models will carry five tons only about 8000 miles.

3. Higher speed in later craft off the assembly line. The slow speed of the B-36—only about 300 miles an hour—is considered its greatest weakness today.

A high AAF official informed The Post that this top speed will be increased by 100 miles an hour with new engines undergoing development. An official announcement said that an improved version of the 3000 horsepower Pratt and Whitney radial air-cooled engines now being tested will add considerable speed.

Brig. Gen. Roger Ramey, commander of the Eighth ("A-Bomb") Air Force, with headquarters here, said the AAF hopes that a new turbine engine under development will give the B-36 a speed of well over 400 miles an hour.

Ramey declared that a sizable fleet of such craft—"capable of striking anywhere in the world from bases in the United States"—largely would eliminate the need for aircraft carriers.

The XB-36 circled the airport in the air here today and landed easily. Then Erick Erickson, the pilot, reversed the props and made history. The plane backed up some 50 feet to its hangar.

Larger wheels plus braking of the propellers will permit later versions to carry on limited operations from fields capable of handling a B-29.

General Ramey said the B-36 has 8 turrets mounting twin 20-millimeter cannon. Its four-sectioned bomb-bay has space equal to four railroad freight cars. An 85-foot tunnel connects the forward and after crew compartments. Its 14 crewmen travel back and forth on a four-wheel scooter operating on rails.

Art Teacher Ready to End Long Career

MRS. LILLIAN G. WINES
Time now for her art

Miss Lillian G. Wines has spent nearly half of her 44 years as a teacher in the public schools in a big sunny room on the top floor of Eastern High School.

There, surrounded by her students' sketches and paintings, she is preparing to retire at the end of this school year.

Retirement will mean a chance to travel and to pick up her own art work dropped years ago when she entered the teaching field. Her travels will be recorded in water colors which she prefers to oils.

An art teacher in the public schools leads a busy life, Miss Wines tells you. In addition to classes to teach, sets for school plays must be designed, names must be lettered on certificates, and there are dozens of other jobs that require the sensitive hands and eyes of one trained in art.

Although born in Iowa, Miss Wines thinks of herself as a native of Washington. She moved to this city when 7 years old and attended schools here.

Her father was a Government employe, but he also was a violin and cabinet maker. There were no painters in the family but "they could use their hands."

Paints in Summer

Miss Wines' first drawings were the paper dolls she designed for friends. Most of her own paintings were done during summer vacations when she attends various art schools throughout the country. Although she never has held an exhibit many of these paintings have been sold.

She admits to being not much of a "modernist" but has gone along with the trend.

Miss Wines makes her home with her brother, Roscoe Wines, at 7900 13th st. nw. He retired from the Internal Revenue Bureau two years ago. Next winter they plan to see Florida together.

New Rocket Engine Propelled By Secret Fuel, Army Says

By the United Press

Army sources revealed last night that a revolutionary new type of rocket engine, using a new secret fuel, is under development at the Solar Aircraft Corp. factory in San Diego, Calif.

The new rocket is a vastly improved version of The Wac Corporal, an American - designed rocket developed secretly during World War II by the Army and scientists at the California Institute of Technology.

The engine is fabricated from pieces of sheet metal rather than the conventional steel casting. Newly-developed high temperature alloys cut the weight of the engine by 500 pounds and speed up the manufacturing process. The weight reduction gives the rocket a greater explosive carrying capacity.

The new rocket is powered by liquid oxygen and a secret chemical. The rocket can fly above the stratosphere since it carries its own oxygen supply.

200 Area Doctors Leaving to Attend Medical Meeting

More than 200 doctors from the Washington area are leaving over the weekend for the four-day centennial convention of the American Medical Association opening tomorrow in Atlantic City.

Dr. Herbert P. Ramsey, retiring chairman of the Washington Metropolitan Health Council, and Dr. Coursen B. Conklin, veteran delegate to national medical conventions, will attend the New Jersey meeting as official delegates of the District of Columbia Medical Society.

Dr. William P. Herbst, jr., president, Dr. Raymond T. Holden, president-elect, and Theodore Wiprud, executive director of the District society, are also among those attending the meeting. Mr. Wiprud will participate in a pre-convention meeting Sunday of county medical society officers.

Twenty-nine physicians in private practice or Government service in the Washington area will share in various scientific exhibits at the convention.

An exhibit of a Nation-wide study of child health services being undertaken by the American Academy of Pediatrics will be a feature of the exhibits from Washington.

Anderson Pledges Extra Sugar Unless Rationing Ends

American housewives will get more sugar this summer, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson promised yesterday.

Anderson told the House Banking Committee that a "sugar bonus" 5 or 10 pounds will be granted for summer canning, unless it is decided to remove all rationing.

Anderson said he should know this week when individual sugar rationing can be ended.

U. S. Surplus Estimate High, Experts Find

By The Associated Press

Government fiscal analysts said yesterday President Truman's estimate of a $1,250,000,000 surplus for this fiscal year ending June 30 now seems too high.

This contrasts with the view of many Republican Congressmen who called the estimate too low when Mr. Truman announced it at a Democratic Jefferson Day dinner April 19.

The fiscal experts, declining to be quoted by name, agreed that the Government will end the year with some surplus. But they noted in an interview that it would have to take in more than 725 million above its expenditures in the three weeks remaining of this month if the figure of a $1,250,000,000 surplus is to be realized.

The Treasury's latest figure, covering the period through June 4, shows the surplus—measuring the excess of income over spending—has shrunk rapidly to $524,658,000 since it hit a record peak of $3,287,000,000 on March 28.

Tax Payments Due

Quarterly income tax payments by corporations and individuals, due June 15, are the chief reliance of Treasury officials for pulling the surplus back up to the vicinity of the Truman estimate.

One factor that has boosted expenditures above estimates has been tax and customs duty refunds.

President Truman estimated in April that these would amount to $2,300,000,000—a hike of 212 million dollars over his original estimate—but nearly $2,700,000,000 in refunds actually had been paid out by June 4, with more than three weeks left in the fiscal year.

The main reason for the underestimate of refunds for this fiscal year has been the speed of the Internal Revenue Bureau in getting refunds out to income taxpayers. Breaking all records, it has returned more than $1,300,000,000 to more than 29 million individual income taxpayers.

The fiscal experts said the expiring year's budget will show no effects whatever from cancellation of $641,832,080 in Commodity Credit Corporation notes by the Treasury under an act of May 27.

Claim Budget Cut

When this was passed, some Republicans claimed that by advancing the cancellation from its scheduled time in the next fiscal year to the one now expiring, they had reduced next year's budget expenditures and boosted this year's.

Actually, the cancellation has been effected already without causing the slightest change in expenditure totals for this year or next, and without affecting the prospective budget surplus.

What happened was this:

The budget had long since reflected the spending of the money as it was paid out to non-Government sources, chalking up the expenditures as they took place over a period of years.

When Congress ordered the cancellation of the CCC notes by the Treasury, the transaction was marked up in effect as a transfer from one Government agency to another, without one agency's gain canceling out the other's loss and the total spending remaining unchanged.

Names in the News

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—The court clerk called the case of Christopher Columbus Spenson, 29, but Judge Julius H. Miner said he couldn't hear it immediately.

"I have others ahead of it on the calendar," he said. "First we have Ulysses S. Grant for automobile theft and then Calvin Coolidge for operating a confidence game. George Washington is still a fugitive, but he is wanted on a murder charge."

War Is Sellout

Riceville, Ia., June 7 (AP).—An ice cream price war ended here last night when everyone ran out of ice cream after the battle had reached a point where one dealer was giving it away by the pint and another paid customers a penny to take a pint home.

Most residents of this town of 950 went to bed with a stomachache.

"EYES THAT TRUST, PLEAD, AND ACCUSE"

The following cable has just been received by the Foster Parents' Plan for War Children, Inc., from its European Director:

"TORN MUTILATED CHILDREN'S FACES—MOUTHS THAT CANNOT CLOSE—NEED PLASTIC SURGERY—PLEASE HELP"

Jules, a nine-year-old Belgian boy, was hit in the face and leg during the Battle of the Bulge. For weeks this boy's cheek was held together with a safety pin. It was impossible to get medical aid to him as he hid in the cellar of a nearby house.

This boy will be spared a living death by plastic surgery. His is just one among many cases. Funds are needed to restore Europe's children mentally, physically and spiritually.

You can help the thousands of children now in desperate need overseas by becoming a foster parent. You will receive a case history and a photograph of the child. Correspondence with the child through our office is encouraged.

The Plan is helping children of fourteen different nationalities in France, Poland, Belgium, Italy, Holland, Malta, England, Switzerland and Czechoslovakia.

The Foster Parents' Plan does not do mass relief. Each child is treated as an individual with the idea that besides food, clothing, shelter and education, the child will live in a home-like atmosphere and receive the loving care that so rightfully belongs to childhood.

Please send clean used clothing to the Plan Collection Depot, 122 East 34th Street, New York City 16, New York, for immediate shipment overseas.

U. S. Surplus Estimate High, Experts Find

By The Associated Press

Government fiscal analysts said yesterday President Truman's estimate of a $1,250,000,000 surplus for this fiscal year ending June 30 now seems too high.

This contrasts with the view of many Republican Congressmen who called the estimate too low when Mr. Truman announced it at a Democratic Jefferson Day dinner April 19.

The fiscal experts, declining to be quoted by name, agreed that the Government will end the year with some surplus. But they noted in an interview that it would have to take in more than 723 million above its expenditures in the three weeks remaining of this month if the figure of a $1,250,000,000 surplus is to be realized.

The Treasury's latest figure, covering the period through June 4, shows the surplus—measuring the excess of income over spending—has shrunk rapidly to $524,658,000 since it hit a record peak of $3,287,000,000 on March 28.

Tax Payments Due

Quarterly income tax payments by corporations and individuals, due June 15, are the chief reliance of Treasury officials for pulling the surplus back up to the vicinity of the Truman estimate.

One factor that has boosted expenditures above estimates has been tax and customs duty refunds.

President Truman estimated in April that these would amount to $2,300,000,000—a hike of 212 million dollars over his original estimate—but nearly $2,700,000,000 in refunds actually had been paid out by June 4, with more than three weeks left in the fiscal year.

The main reason for the underestimate of refunds for this fiscal year has been the speed of the Internal Revenue Bureau in getting refunds out to income taxpayers. Breaking all records, it has returned more than $1,300,000,000 to more than 29 million individual income taxpayers.

The fiscal experts said the expiring year's budget will show no effects whatever from cancellation of $641,832,080 in Commodity Credit Corporation notes by the Treasury under an act of May 27.

Claim Budget Cut

When this was passed, some Republicans claimed that by advancing the cancellation from its scheduled time in the next fiscal year to the one now expiring, they had reduced next year's budget expenditures and boosted this year's.

Actually, the cancellation has been effected already without causing the slightest change in expenditure totals for this year or next, and without affecting the prospective budget surplus.

What happened was this:

The budget had long singe reflected the spending of the money as it was paid out to non-Government sources, chalking up the expenditures as they took place over a period of years.

When Congress ordered the cancellation of the CCC notes by the Treasury, the transaction was marked up in effect as a transfer from one Government agency to another, without one agency's gain canceling out the other's loss and the total spending remaining unchanged.

Names in the News

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—The court clerk called the case of Christopher Columbus Spenson, 29, but Judge Julius H. Miner said he couldn't hear it immediately.

"I have others ahead of it on the calendar," he said. "First we have Ulysses S. Grant for automobile theft and then Calvin Coolidge for operating a confidence game. George Washington is still a fugitive, but he is wanted on a murder charge."

War Is Sellout

Riceville, Ia., June 7 (AP).—An ice cream price war ended here last night when everyone ran out of ice cream after the battle had reached a point where one dealer was giving it away by the pint and another paid customers a penny to take a pint home.

Most residents of this town of 950 went to bed with a stomachache.

"EYES THAT TRUST, PLEAD, AND ACCUSE"

The following cable has just been received by the Foster Parents' Plan for War Children, Inc., from its European Director:

"TORN MUTILATED CHILDREN'S FACES—MOUTHS THAT CANNOT CLOSE—NEED PLASTIC SURGERY—PLEASE HELP"

Jules, a nine-year-old Belgian boy, was hit in the face and leg during the Battle of the Bulge. For weeks this boy's cheek was held together with a safety pin. It was impossible to get medical aid to him as he hid in the cellar of a nearby house.

This boy will be spared a living death by plastic surgery. His is just one among many cases. Funds are needed to restore Europe's children mentally, physically and spiritually.

You can help the thousands of children now in desperate need overseas by becoming a foster parent. You will receive a case history and a photograph of the child. Correspondence with the child through our office is encouraged.

The Plan is helping children of fourteen different nationalities in France, Poland, Belgium, Italy, Holland, Malta, England, Switzerland and Czechoslovakia.

The Foster Parents' Plan does not do mass relief. Each child is treated as an individual with the idea that besides food, clothing, shelter and education, the child will live in a home-like atmosphere and receive the loving care that so rightfully belongs to childhood.

Please send clean used clothing to the Plan Collection Depot, 122 East 34th Street, New York City 16, New York, for immediate shipment overseas.

eal or mental handicaps whose skill is limited.

Another factor in heavier case loads, he said, is the fact that many men whose families received military allotments during the war no longer contribute to the support of their homes.

Under the budget estimate being considered by Congress for public assistance, the District would contribute $1,999,470 and the Federal Government $1,042,290 toward a total of $3,041,760 in aid to the needy.

Commissioner Guy Mason, who attended the Senate hearing yesterday, agreed with Clapp that more money is needed for public assistance. He explained that the Commissioners were unable to recommend the full needs of the Board of Public Welfare for public assistance for 1948.

At the conclusion of yesterday's day care center hearings, Senator Cooper said he would recommend continuation of child day care centers on a restricted basis. Eliminated, under his plan, would be participation of those families who could provide for the care of their children elsewhere.

Temporary Alliance

Houston, Mo., June 7 (AP).—The love that blossomed 42 years ago and produced 18 youngsters, now grown and "scattered all around," died today in court.

Judge Claude Curtis granted a divorce to Mrs. Rosie Richards, 75, from Offie W. Richards, 80. She charged he did not "love me any more."

The couple was married in April, 1905, and lived in the hill country where he was a farmer. They separated last April.

of Warren, Ohio, in the twister's path.

Mrs. Albert Beachley, 66, wife of a farmer, died in St. Elizabeth's Hospital at Youngstown, while Terry Neiswonger, about 3, was reported dead at the Warren City hospital. The lad lived in Vienna Township. Mrs. Howard Gray was another of the dead.

The path of destruction apparently began in northern Summit County, where a severe storm was reported.

The twister cut a swath north of Ravenna, in Portage County, then cut across Trumbull County and into Pennsylvania.

In the Ravenna area, the high wind struck about 1:30 p. m. yesterday.

It was estimated that 40 persons suffered injuries in the Ohio area, receiving treatment at hospitals in Warren, Youngstown and Niles, and at doctors' offices in Mahoning and Trumbull counties.

The twister also struck one building containing an ammunition depot at Ravenna, but did not cause discharge of the explosives, an arsenal spokesman said, adding that no one was injured at the plant.

Committee Maps Celebration Plans

More than 60 members of the National Committee for the American Celebration of the One Hundredth Anniversary of Liberia met yesterday in Carver Hall, 211 Fifth st. nw., to discuss plans for observance of the anniversary, July 26.

Representative William L. Dawson of Illinois, pointed out that the west African republic was colonized through American efforts a century ago.

Walater Walker, former Liberian cabinet member and consul general in the United States, said that Liberia was open to American immigrants interested in developing its resources.

Moss H. Kendrix, executive secretary of the committee, presided at the meeting at which commissions were given Duke Ellington and others for centennial music and Major R. R. Wright of Philadelphia was named to represent the committee at Monrovia during the celebration in the Liberian capital.

Labor Bill Veto Futile, Survey Indicates

By the United Press

A United Press survey of 21 key Democratic Senators showed yesterday that President Truman has almost no chance of getting the necessary votes to sustain a veto of the Republican sponsored labor bill.

It is conceded that the House will vote to override a labor veto. The Senate margin is close but, the survey showed, it is not close enough. It takes a two-thirds majority of both Houses to override a veto.

In contrast, Mr. Truman is assured of the support he needs to sustain a veto of the Republican tax bill.

(In Kansas City, according to the Associated Press, Presidential Secretary, Charles G. Ross said, "Theyre probably will be no action" on the tax bill until after President Truman returns from Canada next Friday. Ross said the President has until June 15 to act on the four billion dollar tax-reduction proposal.—Editors note.)

Veto Deadline June 30

Both measures have been passed in final form by the two houses. The Senate completed action on the labor bill Friday. It will be sent to the White House probably tomorrow, which would give Mr. Truman until midnight June 30 to veto or sign it.

The 21 key Democratic Senators are those who have voted for the Taft-Hartley labor bill all the way through. Assuming that no Republican votes would be switched in response to a veto, the administration must pick up eight votes among those 21 Senators, as matters stand now, in order to sustain a veto.

But the survey showed that 13 of the 21 Democrats will vote to override a veto.

That meant that unless all of the remaining eight switch sides, a veto would be overridden.

Sparkman Says He Will Shift

Here are the results of the poll:

Will vote to override	13
"Inclined" to override	4
Undecided	3
Will vote to sustain	1
Total	21

Of that group, the only one who said he probably would shift to support a veto was Senator John J. Sparkman, D., Ala.

The other 20 are Senators Harry F. Byrd (Va.), Tom Connally (Tex.), James O. Eastland (Miss.), Allen J. Ellender (La.), J. W. Fulbright (Ark.), Walter F. George (Ga.), Carl A. Hatch (N. M.), Clyde R. Hoey (N. C.), Spessard L. Holland (Fla.), Scott W. Lucas (Ill.), John L. McClellan (Ark.), Kenneth McKellar (Tenn.), Burnet R. Maybank (S. C.), Herbert R. O'Conor (Md.), W. Lee O'Daniel (Tex.), A. Willis Robertson (Va.), Richard B. Russell (Ga.), Tom Stewart (Tenn.), Millard E. Tydings (Md.), and William B. Umstead (N. C.)

Of the 21, all except Lucas voted for or was announced in favor of the bill on the final 54-17 vote yesterday. Lucas, who was absent Friday, voted for the original Senate version of the bill.

Those who will vote to override included Byrd, Ellender, Hoey, Holland, McClellan, Tydings and seven others who asked that their names be withheld.

Two of the 21 could not be reached but were reported by colleagues to be "inclined" to override. Two others listed themselves in the same category, but asked that their names be withheld.

Umstead, who expressed hope that Mr. Truman would approve the bill, said he would make no commitment before hearing a veto message. Two others who did not want to be identified said they also were undecided.

Sparkman gave this explanation of his intentions:

"If on anlysis the President determines that the bill is unworkable and unfair and vetoes it for that reason I will support his veto. I have great confidence in the President. I feel that he will do what he thinks is for the good of the country."

Marine Guard Is Acquitted At Annapolis

Annapolis, Md., June 7 (AP).—A Marine corporal who claimed superior officers instructed him to give prisoners in his charge a "hard time" was acquitted today by a Navy general court-martial of charges that he mistreated them.

The Marine, Corpl. William E. Harrison of Temple, Texas, former provost sergeant at the North Severn River Naval Command brig here, denied throughout his trial that he struck or ordered others to strike the prisoners.

But in response to prosecution questioning, the 18-year-old defendant testified that if he had beaten the captives "I would have had authority to do so" because two superior officers "told me to do it."

He identified them as Capt. Thomas Coggins, commander of the Marine detachment here, and Lieut. Guy Rowlett, personnel officer.

Harrison was the fourth man tried on charges of mistreating the brig inmates. Another Marine guard and two prisoners already have been court-martialed. Findings in their cases are now before Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., Naval Academy superintendent, for review. Another Marine guard is awaiting trial.

Told on several occasions "to give the prisoners a hard time," Harrison testified, he took this to mean that the prisoners were to be beaten. But he struck no one and ordered no beatings, he added.

Lieutenant Rowlett told Harrison that he wanted the brig run in such a manner that "prisoners would not want to come back again and again, as they have in the past," the defendant testified.

House Probe Of Building Unions Sought

By the United Press

Chairman Fred A. Hartley, jr., revealed last night that the House Labor Committee will investigate charges trades-unions have staged a "deliberate slowdown" against the housing program.

"We have received these charges from many sources, including union members themselves," Hartley said. "They allege that labor leaders are afraid of a large housing program because it would make them enlarge their unions to a point where they might lose control."

The New Jersey Republican announced that the investigation would be conducted by a subcommittee headed by Representative Ralph W. Gwinn (R., N. Y.). It will be part of an over-all probe of union racketeering scheduled for this summer.

An investigation of the building trades industry would bring the committee up against the powerful AFL construction unions which for years have been Republican strongholds in the ranks of organized labor.

William Hutcheson, president of the AFL United Brotherhood of Carpenters, has headed the labor division of the Republican National Committee in several presidential campaigns. His union is the largest and strongest in the building trades industry.

"We are going to play no favorites in our investigation," Hartley said. "Hutcheson and Moreschi and the whole group are going to be called before the committee and asked some very pointed questions about initiation fees and feather bedding."

He was referring to Joseph V. Moreschi, president of the Hod Carriers and Laborers Union. Hartley said the committee's interest in the building trades arose from a jurisdictional dispute between the laborers and the carpenters in New Jersey.

The argument involved the question of who would tear down wooden forms used for pouring concrete. It was investigated by a House Labor Subcommittee several weeks ago.

Strike Threat Faces Seven Briggs Plants

Detroit, June 7 (AP).—The Briggs Manufacturing Co. today faced a threat by the CIO United Auto Workers to call its 20,000 employes out on strike June 11 in a dispute over a new contract.

A walkout at the seven Briggs plants in Detroit and one in Evansville, Ind., would affect almost immediately the production of automobiles by Chrysler Corp. and the Packard Motor Car Co.

Emil Mazey, regional codirector of the UAW-CIO, said negotiations with the company, underway since May 1, broke down Saturday morning.

Chief issues in the dispute, he said, were the union's demand that a pattern wage increase equivalent to 15 cents an hour be made retroactive, that the contract cover 500 salaried employes and that wage classifications not be frozen.

Unacceptable to Union

In addition, he said, the company demanded changes in the union steward system and grievance machinery within its plants that are not acceptable to the UAW-CIO.

Walter O. Briggs, jr., vice president of the company, said the union, through its strike threat, "apparently has chosen to negotiate by ultimatum instead of bargaining collectively."

Miners Could Top Earners, Coal Men Say

By the United Press

The soft coal industry, facing a possible work stoppage July 7, said last night that miners are the Nation's highest paid industrial workers "if they will just work full time."

It asserted that wages have risen so much in six years that output per $10 of wages paid had declined 46.2 per cent since 1940.

The National Coal Association, spokesman for the industry, said in a bulletin to members that in 1940 the output per $10 of wages paid was 9.1 tons. But last year, the association said, it was only 4.9 tons. It said the reason was wage increases.

The association said it had no desire to debate the questions involved in the currently deadlocked negotiations for a new contract to replace the Government work agreement expiring June 30.

The association said absenteeism is not a fault of the operators. It has been reported time and again the association asserted, that the high amount of earnings has in some instances caused men not to work full time, as they apparently made enough money working only part time. It compared present wages and the new offers made by operators.

Senate Probe Of Tom Clark Is Demanded

By the United Press

Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.) last night demanded a full-scale Senate investigation of the conduct of Attorney General Tom C. Clark in connection with the Missouri vote fraud charges.

Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), a member of Ferguson's subcommittee, said: "The whole thing is political," designed to embarrass the Administration.

The Michigan Republican said he was ready to ask his Judiciary subcommittee on Monday to approve a resolution for a full Senate investigation of what he described as Clark's hands-off attitude toward charges of vote fraud last year in the Democratic primary in President Truman's home political bailiwick.

Axtell Won Nomination

The vote charges were raised in connection with the 1946 party primary in the Fifth Missouri Congressional District in Jackson County. Jackson County embraces Mr. Truman's home town of Independence as well as Kansas City.

In last year's Fifth District primary, Enos Axtell, with the President's backing, defeated former Representative Roger C. Slaughter for the Democratic nomination for Congress.

The resolution for a Senate investigation is sponsored by Senator James P. Kem (R., Mo.). It would authorize investigation of Clark's failure to take action on charges that, in the primary, election judges marked ballots for voters, false names were used in polling places and money was paid for Axtell votes.

No Federal Offenses

Clark maintains that no Federal offenses were committed and that his department thus is powerless to prosecute the charges.

Kem told reporters he believed the primary election showed a "vote fraud pattern" similar to that in 1936 which resulted in prison sentences for some members of the Pendergast machine.

Kem insisted that the hands of the FBI were "tied by order of the Attorney General." He said FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover was restricted to merely a "preliminary" inquiry.

Nebraska Appointment Irks Party Chairman

Grand Island, Nebr., June 7 (AP).—Nebraska's Democratic chairman today offered to resign because he was not consulted before President Truman appointed Dwight Griswold, former Republican Nebraska Governor, to head the Greek aid program.

"If the National Administration has not sufficient confidence in Nebraska party leaders to ask their advice in such matters, other leaders should be selected who will have the confidence . . ." the chairman, Attorney William Ritchie of Omaha, said in a statement.

"POLITICS AND THINGS IN GENERAL" are what Gov. Earl Warren (left) of California said he and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York were talking about as they breakfasted together at the Executive Mansion in Albany, N. Y. At a Union College alumni luncheon yesterday in Schenectady Dewey praised Warren, mentioned as a possible vice presidential nominee on a 1948 Republican ticket headed by the New York chief executive, as a "scientist in the art of government"

Bipartisan Council Advocated For Study of World's Needs

Milwaukee, June 7 (INS).—Eric Johnston called upon President Truman today to form a bipartisan joint council on foreign policy to survey the world's relief and reconstruction needs, and America's own resources.

The president of the American Motion Picture Association told the Young Republican National Federation that the council should be composed of top officers of the Federal executive departments and members of congressional committees dealing with foreign affairs, taxes and appropriations. Johnston, former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, declared:

"American people want to know how much a program of world reconstruction will cost them or how much it might cost them not to do anything at all—and let the world wag as it will."

GOP National Chairman Carroll Reece told the delegates from 48 States and Hawaii that although America has won the war "we have yet to win the peace, and to insure the principles of government for which the war was fought."

Reece said the Nation still is in the war and "not even technically out of it yet," he said.

"That is the problem which should receive the studious attention of all young Republicans."

The chairman said that the "same kind of support" which swept the GOP to victory last year in the congressional elections "will bring us safely into harbor next year" in the race to defeat President Truman. He added:

"We have to clean up the accumulated mess of more than 14 years of mismanagement and extravagance and adherence to un-American theories of government."

Reece pointed out that Russia "is counting upon a serious depression in the United States to enhauce Soviet power and prestige in the international field."

The chairman renewed his charge that the Communists, "fellow travelers" and other radicalgroups had attached themselves to the Administration and the Democratic Party. He pledged the GOP to uproot them.

Reece called the "fellow travelers" the "Typhoid Marys of Communism."

Dewey Lauds Warren's Art As Governor

Schenectady, N. Y., June 7 (AP).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey said today that Gov. Earl Warren of California was "a scientist in the art of government and was largely responsible for restoring the faith of Californians in "responsible, free government."

Dewey's praise of Warren, mentioned as a possible vice presidential nominee on a 1948 Republican ticket headed by the New York chief executive, came at a Union College alumni luncheon.

Dewey introduced the Western Governor who purportedly passed up a chance to become Dewey's running mate in 1944.

Both Governors appeared at the affair after Warren had spent the night in the executive mansion at Albany, where he and Dewey "talked" for more than two hours late last night.

Warren said they had talked over "politics and things in general" but that "no personal politics were discussed."

Dewey, who invited Warren to participate in the Union College commencement activities, said the West Coast Republican had "rescued California from the worst State administration that ever happened to any State."

"He has rehabilitated the finances of a State with tremendous economic and social problems, equaled probably by no State in the Union," Dewey asserted.

"Earl Warren is a scientist in the art of government. He has great courage, an open mind and a warm heart."

Pauley Discounts Party Split, Claims California for Truman

By The Associated Press

Edwin W. Pauley, California Democratic national committeeman, predicted yesterday that "a Democratic ticket headed by President Harry S. Truman will win California in the 1948 elections."

Pauley thus differed with Representative Holifield (D., Calif.), who told the House Friday that there might be a three-way fight among California delegates to the 1948 Democratic National Convention and a resultant loss of the State to the Republicans in the presidential election.

Holifield said such a split would result from what he called the "stupid political action" of Pauley, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder and Gael Sullivan, executive director of the Democratic National Committee. Holifield said Pauley "used his influence" to cancel appearances of Snyder and Sullivan at a Los Angeles Democrats' dinner Thursday night.

Pauley said he had "no comment" in reply to Holifield directly.

As for the political situation to which Holifield referred, however, Pauley said he had "nothing whatever to do" with the nonappearance of Sullivan and Snyder at the dinner.

Snyder cancelled his appearance at the dinner saying it was necessary for him to attend a Cabinet meeting in Washington Thursday.

Pauley said he definitely disagreed with James Roosevelt, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee of California, concerning a "so-called policy statement." Hollifield told the House this statement "mildly criticized the Truman Doctrine."

As for the accusation that he "gratuitously" insulted Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who spoke at the dinner, Pauley said "that is not true." He said the incident had "nothing to do with Mrs. Roosevelt in any manner."

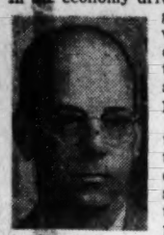
Civil Service Plans Aid For Career Employes

Civil Service will try again to help those career employes who have lost or will lose their jobs in the economy drive. It means to get really tough with the Federal agencies this time—or so its officials promise.



Kluttz

The heart of the program is to force agencies to fire war service and temporary people, and to fill these jobs with suitable displaced career employes.

Civil Service announced such a program several months ago. However, it hasn't been successful. Frankly, the agencies didn't cooperate. After all, they were all facing layoffs and their officials didn't want to complicate things further by giving jobs to displaced people from some other agency.

So all the job rights and protection the career employe had been promised quickly disappeared.

But now Civil Service has come up with a program which appears to have sharp teeth. It proposes:

1. That no war service or temporary employe in this city can be transferred, reassigned or promoted unless prior approval is given by the Civil Service Commission. And Civil Service will not approve—in fact, it will cause the war service or temporary employe involved to be fired—if it has a displaced permanent who can fill the job.

2. Also, the commission will withdraw all authority from the agencies here to make temporary appointments unless it specifically approves each job involved. For example, say Agriculture wants to hire half a dozen stenographers. For the past several years it could give temporary jobs to the first half dozen stenographers it could locate. But no longer.

Agriculture now must inform Civil Service that it needs the stenos, and if Civil Service can't fill the jobs with displaced career employes then it will approve the hiring of temporary people.

3. This is the main point—an inventory of all Federal jobs to be made quarterly to start July 15.

At this moment, Civil Service doesn't know in detail of the jobs in any agency or department. Therefore, it hasn't been able to force, say, Treasury, to fire its CAF-9 war service accountants, and to hire displaced career auditors from OPA. It simply didn't have facts to back up its suspicions.

But the proposed job inventory will give the commission all such information. After July 15, the commission will be able to force the discharge of the war service people when it has surplus permanents who can qualify for their positions. The system will be sugar-coated only to this extent—that agencies will be given the choice of at least three displaced permanents.

The whole program, however, is most discouraging to the able war service and temporary employe who would like to make a career of Government.

HUMANS: Many of the Federal workers who have been fired or will be fired have asked this question: "Are we human beings?" And it seems to me that they have good grounds for asking that question. Why? Because they aren't always treated like humans. The human element is being lost in the economy wave. For example:

The employes are paid a lump sum for accumulated annual leave. But a big wad of taxes are taken out of each payment. Say the lump sum amounts to $500. Well, the withholding tax on that $500 is made as though the employe is paid that much money for a two-week period. Of course, he'll get a rebate in a year or so from Internal Revenue, but it all adds up to a lot of inconvenience for both the employe and the Government.

Forgotten by Congress is the Lane bill which would correct this problem.

The Federal worker isn't covered by unemployment compensation like his colleague in private industry. There's a move on to try to get the President again to urge Congress to include Federal workers in this benefit. However, the inside word is this—that the Administration will strongly recommend the coverage if a congressional committee will ask the Budget Bureau for a report.

NOTICE: Again and again the Administration has repeated its policy that at least 30 days on the job should be given employes who are to be fired. But day after day faithful employes who have had 5, 10, and up to 20 years of service are ordered fired with no on-the-job notice whatever. It's happening at Interior, Agriculture, War, and other agencies. The agencies have a good point, too, they haven't the money to carry them on.

TRAGIC: The pitiful cases are those of the long-time employes—[illegible] Government specialists who [illegible] being fired. At middle and [illegible]age these people are faced [illegible] trying to find a new career [illegible] themselves. In many cases, [illegible] talents and experience can't [illegible]d to private industry. The [illegible]hey have performed is pe[illegible]o Government.

[illegible]anger-Chavez retirement [illegible]the great white hope to [illegible]hese people. It would [illegible]itled them to retire on [illegible]nnuity. But that bill [illegible]ost now and the only [illegible]ople have left to fall [illegible]ayer.

Citizens Ask Chest to Drop Social Council

The Federation of Citizens Associations last night adopted a resolution asking that the Council of Social Agencies be dropped from Washington's Community Chest.

The action came as an answer to a recently released report of a CSA committee recommending, according to the Federation resolution, that CSA take over the whole job of spending Chest money.

Three Federation delegates are members of the 24-man citizens' committee now making a study of Chest activities.

Introduced by E. C. Hartung, of the Brightwood Citizens' Association, last night's resolution said the CSA report "was designed to encroach upon the function of this citizens' committee." It reaffirmed confidence in the Federation members of the committee and left the way open for possible readmission of a revamped Council of Social Agencies.

"We suggest that the Council of Social Agencies should be . . . permitted to reform its organization if it desires to do so, and then apply to the new board of trustees for admittance."

In a related action, the federation's final meeting of the season reaffirmed a two-year-old demand that the Washington Housing Association and the Washington Urban League be dropped from the Chest.

Delegate Harry N. Stull, who introduced this motion, said the federation "does not want to condemn the Community Chest; we only want to purge it of organizations that don't properly belong under it."

In other resolutions, the group announced support of a House bill that would place administration of the office of recorder of deeds under the District Commissioners, and urged continuation of the office of people's counsel before the Public Utilities Commission.

Earlier, they heard an address by George E. Keneipp, director of vehicles and traffic. Keneipp outlined a program for removal of many stop signs at intersections where vision is unobstructed and urged citizens to voice their views on the proposal at a public hearing before the District Commissioners June 16.

Baby, Nurse Hurt Critically In Auto Crash

An 18-month-old infant and the nurse caring for him were both injured critically yesterday in a two-car collision on Eastern dr. near Georgia ave., on the same day the child's parents left for a vacation at the seashore.

Lee Handel, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Handel of 8006 Eastern dr., Silver Spring, suffered a possible skull fracture, other head injuries and abrasions, in the accident at 3:30 p. m.

His nurse, Miss Constance Boden, 45, of 1717 20th st. nw., who was caring for him at the Handel home, sustained a possible skull fracture, possible broken left leg and bruises. Police said she was driving her automobile, with the child in the front seat beside her, when it collided with an automobile driven by George McComas, 19, of 908 Glazewood ct., Takoma Park, Md.

Both nurse and child were taken to Washington Sanitarium, Takoma Park, where their conditions were still critical late last night.

The Handels, who left home yesterday morning for a vacation in Asbury Park, N. J., were notified of the accident and left immediately for Washington.

McComas was charged by police with failure to give full time and attention to his driving and with failure to notify police of his change of home address.

5 Deaths Recorded

106 Persons Injured in D. C. Home Accidents During Week

A 14-year-old youth who fractured his arm when he fell while sliding down a bannister was among 106 District residents injured in home accidents last week.

Others hurt, according to a Red Cross report yesterday, included: a man of 21 who lacerated the end of his thumb in a food grinder; a man of 37 who cut one eye on a glass straw when he bent over a glass of beverage; an 18-months-old child who fell with a plastic hair beret in his mouth and injured his throat; a 5-year-old boy who fell from a yard swing and fractured his arm.

Nineteen children were cut when they fell on broken glass in yards, two were hurt when they tripped on cans and four while climbing fences.

A 9-year-old cut his cheek when he fell with scissors in his hand. A child of 7 scraped skin off his leg while climbing a tree and three days later was given hospital care because the wound had become infected.

Two children swallowed quarters.

Three persons who died last week because of falls in their homes, an infant who was accidentally smothered in bed, and a man of 25 who died from an accidentally self-inflicted gunshot wound, boosted the District's home death toll to 104 for the year. Those who died included a man of 34 who fell out of a window and a 43-year-old woman who fell from a ladder while cleaning windows.

19 Seniors of 11 High Schools Win 4-Year G. W. Scholarships

Nineteen graduates of 11 high schools in the District area were named yesterday as winners of four-year scholarships to George Washington University for excellency in liberal arts studies.

The winners, announced by Dean Myron L. Koenig, chairman of the trustee scholarship committee, represents eight public high schools in the District; two from nearby Virginia and one from Maryland. They will be required to take at least 15 hours work each semester and to maintain a B average through all four years of school.

These winners were listed by Dean Koenig:

Western High School—Larry Lloyd, 21 Beechwood lane, Falls Church, Va., member of the staff of the yearbook, and Jean Edgar, 2700 13th rd. S., Arlington, editor of the student newspaper.

Army-Guard Row Reported Over Rejection of Promotions

By The Associated Press

The Army and Navy Bulletin said today that relations between the Regular Army and National Guard "have been further strained" by a War Department board's order turning down two Texas National Guard officers recommended for Federal recognition.

The Texans are H. Miller Ainsworth, Luling, Tex., and John W. Naylor, Fort Worth, both wartime colonels and both chosen by Gov. Buford J. Jester of Texas for brigadier general rank in the National Guard.

The Army and Navy Bulletin, an unofficial weekly publication, told of Texas congressional protests against the decision of the War Department's general officer examining board, and of orders for a new hearing.

It added:

"In National Guard circles, there is a feeling that Ainsworth was slapped down because of his caustic criticism of the bloody diversionary Rapido River assault in Italy. . . . Ainsworth was prominent in the unsuccessful attempt to obtain a congressional investigation of the Rapido River operation.

"A principal target of the critics was Gen. Mark W. Clark, Fifth Army commander, charged with ordering the attack, who was called 'an inefficient and inexperienced officer' in a resolution adopted by the Thirty-sixth Division Association. The resolution called the Rapido action 'one of the colossal blunders of the second World War.' At that convention of the association in January, 1946, Ainsworth was elected president of the organization. Later, he and other Texans vigorously, but vainly, opposed the promotion of Clark in permanent rank. Naylor apparently took no part in the proceedings.

"The War Department had nothing to say about the Rapido angle of Ainsworth's case, but it was stated by persons present at the board hearings that this was not mentioned. In the Pentagon, there was some talk that political pressure was being brought into play to get the Texans approved by the board."

Council Gives Cancer Study Units $141,311

The National Advisory Cancer Council has approved grants-in-aid totaling $141,311 for cancer research here and in Baltimore.

This was announced yesterday following a two-day meeting of the council at the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda.

Georgetown University's School of Medicine and Medical Center received two of the grants-in-aid—$12,636 for study of the endocrine aspects of cancer and $5000 for an inventory of tissue regeneration in benign and malignant tumors.

Garfield Gets $25,747

The National Research Council here received a $27,000 grant for correlation of structure with biological action of chemical compounds, and the Warwick Memorial Clinic for Cancer and Allied Diseases at Garfield Hospital received a $25,747 grant for study of the diagnosis and therapy of clinical cancer.

Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore received four grants, totaling $69,928.

The Washington and Baltimore institutions were among 32 institutions throughout the country which received nearly $900,000 grants.

Urges Integration

In announcing the grants, the council urged close cooperation between the Committee on Growth of the National Research Council and the American Cancer Society to assure integrated cancer research.

A policy resolution, adopted at the Friday session, announced that the National Cancer Institute will test any cancer remedy provided it is given full information regarding the treatment, full information regarding the preparations used, and provided the patients survive at least five years.

Pigeons Carry Good Wishes Of Boy Scouts

Operation Carrier Pigeon got off to a flying start yesterday afternoon before the eagle eyes of some 400 Boy Scouts of the northern district.

Scouters, at their annual weekend camporee at Fort Totten Park ne., released a flock of the winged messengers bearing messages of greeting to scouts in the New York-New Jersey area.

Drops Message

The pigeons, postgraduate students at Pigeon Training Center, Fort Monmouth, N. J., were making good headway according to early reports.

Another camporee highlight was the dropping of a message by an L-5 liaison plane from Fort Meade. Jubilation ran rampant when the text was read. It was an invitation from Clark Griffith inviting all patrols that qualify as "above standard campers" to be his guests June 14, at the Washington-Detroit ball game.

Storm Lashes Camp

The boys also witnessed and participated in demonstration of field radio and wire communications staged by Army personnel under Lieut. Col. Eric F. Storm, Fort Belvoir Signal Corps officer.

An unscheduled event—last night's lashing storm—thoroughly dampened the campfire that followed the full day's activities. But the junior woodsmen and their tents were proof against the elements, leaders reported.

After religious services, announcements of rewards and policing of grounds, scouts are to strike tents for the homeward trek early this afternoon.

Rocks, Rills and Rolling Diner

Great Falls Means Paradise To D. C. Hikers, Picnickers

An outdoor paradise lies less than 15 miles to the northwest of Washington.

Turbulent waters . . . thickly wooded strips . . . a historic canal . . . the beautiful Potomac . . . picturesque dwellings. . .

These, and more, are the offerings of Great Falls, both on the Virginia and Maryland side.

Outdoor fans visit the scenic spot to the tune of some 10,000 most Sundays, according to estimates yesterday by National Capital Parks.

The trip on the Maryland side of the Potomac can be made daily by Cabin John trolley to the end of the line, followed by a 7-mile hike to the falls. The Washington, Virginia and Maryland Coach Co. carries passengers directly to the Virginia end.

Both sides can be reached by auto, and parking facilities are available. To reach the Maryland part, travel out MacArthur blvd. past Glen Echo and Cabin John and continue on the boulevard until reaching the falls. Easiest route to the Virginia side is via Chain Bridge, out Route 123 to Langley and from there by Route 604 to the falls.

The falls area, restricted during the war because of its importance in supplying Washington's water, contains ample picnicking and hiking facilities. Most popular hiking path is along the historic Chesapeake and Potomac Canal.

The developed area on the Maryland side, over which NCP has jurisdiction, covers about 15 acres. Government Services, Inc., operates a rolling diner to provide visitors with snacks and plans shortly to make pedal boats and canoes available.

On the Virginia side is Great Falls Park, operated privately.

The falls were known to Capt. John Smith when he made his surveys in 1608. George Washington, as a young surveyor, recognized them as a barrier to westward expansion and proposed his old "Potomack" canal, in operation until the 1920's.

Veteran Job Placement Rises 19%, All Other 15%, in May Unemployed veterans, and to a lesser degree, the nonveteran unemployed, found more job opportunities in the Washington area last month than during April.

Statistics compiled by the United States Employment Sertvice for the District and released yesterday by Fred Z. Hetzel, USES director here, showed the increase for veterans' job placement was 19 per cent, in comparison to an increase of 15 per cent for the nonvets.

On the other side of the employment ledger, applications for work filled by veterans in May were but 4 per cent higher than the preceding month. The director said that an average of 75 former service men and service women applied for work daily during May in comparison to 72 such applicants in April.

Job applicants seeking work in the so-called white-collar positions, Hetzel said, reported they still had to "shop around" more than those after industrial and trades jobs. But even in the office positions, he said, there was a noticeable increase in job placements.

Considering both veterans and nonveterans, 26 more persons were hired daily in the Nation's Capital than were hired in April, the USES statistics showed. The figures for May and April, respectively, were 187 job placements to 161 each USES work day.

Director Hetzel termed the May upswing in employment a seasonal rise, which may be expected to decline this month through summer.

Since the first of January, the two local offices of USES have handled 413,876 reception contacts, or visits of applicants to the offices. The stream of new applications for work amounted to 25,713. Total placements over the five-month period came to 16,671, and a total of 5908 counseling interviews were granted applicants who need job guidance.

was waiting to board, on the 30th pl. hill at Legation st. nw.

She was pronounced dead on the spot by an interne from Emergency Hospital. One front wheel of the Capital Transit Co. bus, loaded with passengers, passed over her body.

The bus driver, Clarence Woods, 27, of 9720 Old Bladensburg rd., Silver Spring, Md., told police he temporarily lost control of his vehicle when he attempted to stop and pick up Miss Kirkpatrick. The bus mounted the curb, struck Miss Kirkpatrick and ran over her body before he could bring it to a stop, he told police.

Woods was released in the custody of the transit company's attorney to appear later at a coroner's inquest. Police blamed the accident on the wet street.

Alexandria firemen reported they responded to three fires at homes where the roofs were struck by lightning. Damage was slight in all cases and the minor blazes were confined to attics and the roofs of homes at 310 King st., 307 Calvert st., and 2705 Central ave.

In Arlington, a lightning bolt struck a power transformer in the 1200 block of N. Monroe st. at 9 p. m., throwing more than 100 homes in that area in darkness. The power was restored by electric company trouble-shooters in 20 minutes.

Lightning, at 8:45 p. m., struck and severed an overhead power cable on the Cabin John streetcar line at Edmonds pl. The bolt started a fire in the fuse box of a passing trolley, operated by Joseph E. Rosenberger, of 1300 Dexter ter. se.

Police and the operator cautioned passengers to remain within the car until the power could be cut off.

A creek in the valley running through the 2700 block of S. Glebe rd., Arlington, overflowed its banks and mounted to first-floor window-sill heights of some apartments there. The flood waters swirled around parked automobiles there and property damage was believed heavy.

Alexandria police said creeks and runs throughout the area were flooding their banks shortly before last midnight.

At Presidential Gardens, Alexandria apartment development, Four-Mile-Run was reported to have backed water to near some doorsteps there and to have covered parts of Arlington Ridge rd.

Rain waters flooded the streets and service driveways at the Jubal Early Homes, 501 20th st., S. Arlington, but had begun to subside before reaching any of the apartment units.

'Visiting' Monkey Bites D. C. Woman at Circus

Mrs. Helen Sinkatis, 30, 1738 P st. nw., was bitten by a monkey yesterday while watching the animals at the circus. Police said the animals belonged to two youths, also visitors at the circus.

Mrs. Sinkitis was treated at Casualty Hospital and released.

Home-Rule Hearings Open Again June 30

The voteless residents of the District will have another chance June 30 at trying to impress Congress with the need for giving them a voice in local government.

Chairman James C. Auchincloss (R., N. J.) of the House District Home Rule Subcommittee, said yesterday hearings would be held before several groups of his subcommittee beginning that day.

Letters have been sent to every member of the House inviting them to testify. Letters have also been sent to the President asking that a representative of his office come, too, and members of the Cabinet with functions in District government have also been invited.

Several prominent local residents, veterans of previous battles to restore their rights to a vote in local govern ment, will also be heard, said Auchincloss.

To quicken the pace of the hearings, Auchincloss said he would break up his subcommittee into groups to examine various phases of home rule.

The Senate Committee has approved a bill setting up a commission of residents to write a charter, but no floor action has been taken.

However, members of the Senate Home Rule Subcommittee have been invited to participate in the House discussions.

"We don't know what form of local government will be necessary," said Auchincloss. "It may be the present form, a city council type, a city manager, or maybe we'll decide a mayor should be elected."

Hecht Store Honors 375 For Service

More than 375 employes of The Hecht Co., all with at least 10 years of company service, frolicked last night at the Statler.

They were members of the company's Ten-to-Fifty-Year Club.

They enjoyed a six-course dinner, dancing, and a floor show put on by their fellow employes.

Dean of those present was Wharton E. Lester, the Hecht Co. attorney, who has been with the store 51 years. He was made a member emeritus of the club.

Called "Honorary Board"

Speakers included C. B. Dulcan, sr., general manager, who likened the Ten-to-Fifty-Year Club to an "honorary board of directors" for the store and Samuel M. Hecht, 39-year-old company president. William Loman, store personnel manager, was toastmaster.

Awards were presented employes being admitted to the club and to those completing 15, 20, 25 and 30 years of service. Twenty-three, completing 10 years, were admitted to the membership.

Besides Lester, other long-service employes heading the list of those present were Dan Krauskopf and William Littleton, each with 48 years' service, and C. L. Marlow, with 46 years.

Watches, Pins Awarded

Moses Hecht, board chairman, and Alexander Hecht, board vice chairman, each have completed 51 years' service, but neither could attend last night's banquet.

Jack Catts, who has 19 years' service, is president of the club; Mrs. Lucy Stockman, 26 years' service, vice president, and Mrs. Muriel Baldwin, 22 years, secretary.

Diamond pins for completion of 30 years' service were presented to Mrs. Kate Hobday and Mrs. Elva Keough while gold watches for 25 years' service were given to Mrs. Mildred Long Ellis, George Graham and Mrs. Marie Williams.

Youth, 19, Saves Boy, 8, Sinking Off Channel Pier

Eight-year-old Robert Petty, 354 McLean ave. sw., owes his life today to a 19-year-old youth who happened to be working on a boat at a Washington Channel pier about 4 p. m. yesterday.

Robert and two companions were wading in the channel, south of Pier No. 5, when Robert suddenly stepped into water over his head.

His companions, Charles Daniel, 8, of 347 McLean ave. sw., and Roger Lee, 10 of 352 McLean ave., noticing his struggles, called to Andrew Passante, 19, who lives aboard a yacht, the Acushnet.

Passante, who was working on a boat on the pier, pulled Robert out and revived him after five minutes of artificial respiration.

Essayists' Contest Offers $500 Prize For District Youth

Residents of the District area under 19 years of age are eligible to compete for a $500 prize to be awarded in an essay contest sponsored by the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States.

Essays on "Can I Be a Patriot?" should be submitted to W. Elkins Reed of 910 Thayer ave., Silver Spring, recorder of the organization, by September 1, he announced yesterday. Officers of the group will select the winning essay.

The national organization was founded in 1865 by officers of the Army and Navy to "protect the rights and liberties of American citizenship and maintain national honor, union and independence."

939 Get Maryland Degrees In University's Record Class

The University of Maryland's largest graduating class, 939 students, received degrees yesterday in colorful ceremonies at Ritchie Coliseum before a crowd of 8000.

Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., was awarded the honorary degree of doctor of laws by University President H. C. Byrd, after delivering a forward-looking commencement address.

Today, at 10:30 and 11 a. m., respectively, baccalaureate mass will be said at Georgetown and Catholic Universities.

Tomorrow, at 5 p. m., on the lawn, 600 Georgetown University students will receive degrees and hear a commencement address by William C. Bullitt, former U. S. Ambassador to Russia and France. Some 700 candidates will be graduated from Catholic University at 10:30 a. m., Wednesday in the fifty-eighth annual commencement exercises in the gymnasium. Senator Brian McMahon (D., Conn.) will speak.

The University of Maryland graduates and guests, who filled all available floor space in the flag-draped coliseum, heard Governor Lane envision a future of myriad opportunities and label education the "bedrock" upon which "we as a Nation and people stand."

An expanded educational program is necessary, the State's Chief Executive said, if "we as a Nation are to prosper and the ideals of the Nation are to endure.

"If our American way of life fails, if we fail as a leader among nations, if we do not meet our economic, domestic, and social problems, I am confident history will find it was because we did not accept and discharge our responsibilities in the education of our people," he asserted.

Afterwards, graduates and their guests were treated to a picnic luncheon of sandwiches, pickles, ice cream and coffee, on the campus. Five members of the class of 1897, who met for their fiftieth reunion as special guests of the university, lunched with President Byrd and the Governor.

Miss Margaret Hickey, honorary president, National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, told the students:

"No matter how successful a woman may be as a politician or an artist, a professor or a business executive, unless she can look with an unintimidated eye at the kitchen stove and the after-dinner dishes, her education is incomplete."

The jobs that women do particularly well, Miss Hickey said, are those "which, like marriage, require qualities of warm human insite, endurance and devotion." She urged, however, that more women "share the burden of government in their local communities and world community."

The Immaculate Conception Academy will hold its eighty-second commencement exercises in parish auditorium at 8 p. m. today. Monsignor John K. Cartwright, former pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church and now rector of St. Matthews' Cathedral, will address the assembly.

At Priory School, 14th st. and S. Dakota ave. ne., 16 graduates will receive diplomas from the Apostolic Delegate, the Most Rev. Amleto Cicognani, in services beginning at 10:30 a. m. today.

A solemn high mass will be sung by the Very Rev. Dom H. Alvin Boultwood before the award of diplomas. The Rev. Dom Austin McNamee, headmaster, will present the graduates.

Graduation exercises at the Sidwell Friends School will be held in the garden of Grayson House Wednesday at 7 p. m. Dr. Peter Marshall, minister of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, will deliver the principal address.

2 Policemen Set to Justify Youth's Arrest

Two District policemen, suspended over the beating of a Georgetown University student, are prepared to "justify" his arrest at his trial, Tuesday, their attorney declared yesterday.

The student, Daniel J. Fitzpatrick, 22, faces charges of being drunk and disorderly. He, in turn, charged he was arrested twice without justification and that one of the policemen blackjacked him without provocation on the second arrest.

Suspended after preliminary police department investigation of the alleged beating last Wednesday morning are Pvt. James A. Stewart, jr., 35, of 5701 N. 10th rd., Arlington, Va., and his companion at the time, Pvt. Warren L. Garrett, 32, of 1549 35th st. nw.

Even as their attorney was stating they would prove validity of the arrests, department investigators were sifting evidence of their conduct during and preceding the beating before placing formal charges against them. Inspector Walter Thomas, acting superintendent of police, said the formal charges might be issued tomorrow. If so, they would face Police Trial Board hearings next Friday, he added.

The policemen's attorney, James J. Laughlin, said he had statements from Private Stewart covering the two arrests. He said he planned to ask why the student was out at that time and who his companion was.

Edward Bennett Williams, attorney for the student, said his client could explain satisfactorily.

Clay Would Leave Industrial Plan Up to Germans

Berlin, June 7 (U.P.)—Assistant Secretary of War Howard C. Petersen said today that Gen. Lucius D. Clay, military governor of the American zone, does not oppose socialization of industry in the American and British zones, provided "it stems democratically from the German people."

Petersen said he didn't think the United States position was in favor of socialism. He agreed with Clay's view.

Petersen, at a press conference yesterday, answered the belittlement by the Soviet army's German-language newspaper Taeglicher Rundschau of the American contribution to defeat of Germany.

"I do not believe Russia alone could have defeated Germany and that is without taking into consideration the material aid we gave Russia," he said.

Business Outlook

Cross Currents Mark Present

WERE there such an instrument as an economic weathervane, today it would be whirling itself to smithereens. It couldn't stand the strain of such directional pulls and pushes as these:

1. Five major machine tool builders raise prices 10 per cent to offset 15-cent-an-hour wage boost. But Irwin H. Cornell, vice president and sales manager of St. Joseph Lead, predicts that the 1948 lead price will be closer to 12 cents a pound than 15 cents, the price now prevailing.

2. The Stratford Pen Corp. omits its common dividend—a positive indication that the postwar grab for fountain pens is over. But Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Arrow-Hart & Hegeman, and Marine Midland Corp. all advance their rates.

3. Allis-Chalmers plans to build a two million dollar plant in Pittsburgh, yet building generally suffers from high costs. Thus, starts on new homes during May are only about the same as in April. So again home building fails to make its normal seasonal gain.

4. Exports climb to record levels. But Great Britain has used up half of its $3,750,000,000 U. S. credit in one year instead of the expected two. Does that augur a drop in export sales as the world scrabbles for dollars?

Recession Pros and Cons

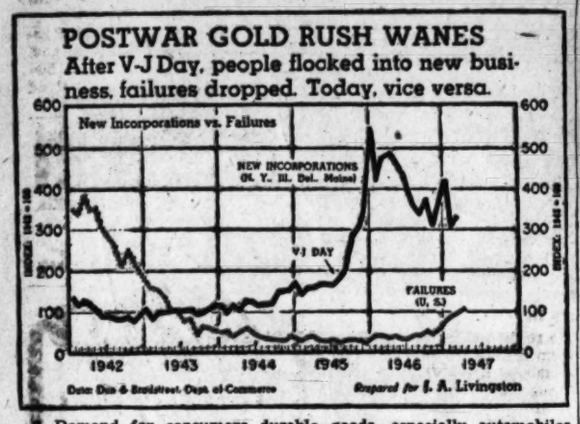
The result is that business prognosticators have divided into two schools: one school says the recession is here, the other says the recession just isn't.

The recession-isn'ters concede that April wasn't as good as March production-wise. But they observe that one month doesn't make a slump; that many times in the past, business has slipped for 60 to 90 days and has come back. Then triumphantly, they point to the steel industry booming along at 97 per cent of capacity. How, they ask, can you have a slump when the heavy industries—automobiles and machinery—are going like that?

The recession-isn'ters enumerate six factors to explain their position:

1. National income is at an all-time high; thus, people have record spending power.

2. Employment is still high and the recent wage boosts are just beginning to bolster purchasing power.



3. Demand for consumers durable goods, especially automobiles, has hardly been tapped.

4. Exports are likely to continue at record high levels, because the U. S. will supply foreign exchange—through loans or gifts—to help rehabilitate Europe and the Far East.

5. Farm prices, hence farm income, are not apt to drop much, because of world-wide demand.

6. Some slow-down in production and consumption was to be expected after the postwar boom.

The recession-is-here school concedes that the heavy industries are booming. It concedes further that recent retail sales volume has been surprising. Post-Easter department store sales are running about 12% ahead of a year ago as against only nominal gains prior to Easter. However, prices are up about 10 per cent to 15 per cent. So actual goods sold are running a bit below a year ago.

The Recessionists' Story

So, ask the recessionists, how long can that last? Isn't it just a matter of time before the production indexes take a decisive downturn? As the recessionists see it, the downturn has started. They argue:

1. Spotty unemployment is on the increase.

2. Manufacturers' shipments are exceeding new orders, hence backlogs are dropping.

3. Construction is not coming through as expected.

4. Consumers are saving less money—actually and percentagewise—than one and two years ago.

5. Finally, the recessionists alight on a subtle point: the change in the business climate, the gradual transition from a seller's to a buyer's market.

No longer can anybody, merely by going into business, make money. On the contrary, it gets harder and harder as buyers—ultimate consumers—become increasingly price-conscious and wardrobes and larders become better stocked. This shows up specifically in the rise in business failure—four times a year ago. At the same time, new incorporations are declining. The gold rush—the zest to start a business—is on the wane (see chart).

You Pays Your Money

Under such circumstances, it's anything but easy for manufacturers to pass along to wholesalers and wholesalers to retailers the recent increase in costs due to wage boosts. Inevitably, profits are squeezed. Hence, it's unsurprising that businessmen generally are engaged in a sort of industrial stock-taking. Speculation—the willingness to increase inventories—has diminished. Under-buying is taking place. During the last year department stores have reduced their outstanding orders from 900 million dollars to 400 million dollars. Quite clearly, merchandisers are not chancing price declines. Unless something jars businessmen loose from this caution, the drop which started in April is bound to go further. At least, so argue the recessionists, including me.

But the recession-isn'ters have a counter argument. In economics there's always another side. They say this caution is all to the good. It means that merchants will have to place orders sooner rather than later, and that that will turn business up again. So you pays your money and you bets on your economist. But it's better to play him across the board, rather than on the nose.

Maryland Banks Start Saturday Closing Policy

Baltimore, June 7 (AP).—Banks in Baltimore and several other Maryland communities were closed today, starting a Saturday closing policy authorized by the 1947 General Assembly for Baltimore and 18 of the State's 23 counties.

The Saturday closing is optional with the directors of each institution, but in the exempted Eastern Shore counties—Caroline, Queen Anne, Wicomico, Worcester, and Somerset, banks must remain open.

All financial institutions in Baltimore closed, but in the counties the policy varied.

Anne Arundel, Hartford, Frederick and Washington County banks closed generally.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—A heavy selling wave swept over the wheat pit in the last 10 minutes on the Board of Trade today, uncovering numerous stop-loss orders and knocking the bread cereal down for losses which extended to 4½ cnts in the July contract.

The late selling in wheat had some influence on feed grains, which retreated in a more orderly fashion. Before the late break all oats contracts had reached new seasonal highs and the July corn delivery had gone to the best price for any yellow grain delivery in 27 years.

Schram Urges Overhauling Of Tax System

By S. Oliver Goodman
Post Reporter

Bedford Springs, Pa., June 7.—Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange, today appealed for overhauling of the Federal tax system and the elimination of taxing for nonrevenue purposes.

In an address to members of the District of Columbia Bankers Association at their twenty-ninth annual meeting in the Bedford Springs Hotel, he listed four reforms as urgently needed:

1. Simplify the tax system "so that businessmen and individual tax payers can know better where they are going and how much it is going to cost them.

2. Make the social import of taxes more incidental and less the prime thought back of levies.

3. Abolish "double taxation."

4. Tax for revenue and encourage men to produce incomes to tax.

Warning that the rulers of Russia are pinning their hopes on the alleged weaknesses of our system more than any boasted strength of their own, Schram declared that the "one most pernicious evil we do to the free enterprise system is accomplished in the field of taxation.

Last Citadels of Capitalism

"We are in a situation today," he added, "where we have to face facts. The United States and Canada are the last citadels of democratic capitalism. And even here the competitive enterprise system has been diluted to some extent by ideas inflicted upon us by socialistic philosophers.

"Congress, he said, should levy taxes for revenue only and 'not attempt to attain social and economic ends through further prostitution of the power to tax.'"

Commenting on the outlook, Schram foresaw a "business adjustment" but nothing in the nature of the 1929-1933 depression.

"Just why so many people think that every business readjustment must be like 1929-1933 or worse, I can't comprehend," he asserted. "The record shows that the 1929-1933 depression was pathological in all its aspects, carrying to extremes the process of disintegration which usually is arrested before it does so much damage. We can have business adjustments without deep depressions.

McCloy Calls Talk "Sinister"

John J. McCloy, president of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, told the bankers that "there was something sinister" in the continual talk of a coming recession. A readjustment, he added, is something not to be afraid of but "something to reinvigorate ourselves." Explaining the aims and progress of the World Bank, he emphasized that political pressures will have no place in the institution's policies. McCloy also answered questions from the floor.

Included in the day's business was election of officers for American Bankers Association units. A. Scott Offut was elected a member of the ABA executive council for a term of three years. Thomas J. Groom was chosen a member and Charles H. Doing an alternate member of the ABA nominating committee.

Vice presidents of the four ABA divisions were chosen as follows: Walton L. Sanderson, National Bank division; John E. Monk, savings division; Robert J. Boyd, State Bank division, and Kenneth Brigfield, trust division.

A heavy rain fall washed out the morning's outdoor recreational events but afternoon sunshine dried out the golf links, tennis courts and horseshoe pits.

The twenty-ninth annual convention closed tonight with a reception to newly-elected officers, the "family dinner" and announcement of contest winners.

Norris Named President of Association

Bedford Springs, Pa., June 7.—Richard A. Norris, who 26 years ago started his career as a bank runner, today was elected president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, succeeding S. William Miller. Norris is executive vice president of the Lincoln National Bank.

Other officers of the association elected and installed tonight are: Robert H. Lacey, first vice president, and George M. Fisher, second vice president. Albert S. Gatley was reelected treasurer for his thirty-fifth consecutive term, and Eldridge D. Kenrick, was renamed secretary.

Norris, the affable new president, is 43 and a native of Washington. He first was associated with Columbia National Bank, and in 1921 became associated with Lincoln National.

A past president of Washington chapter, American Institute of Banking, Norris has held numerous committee chairmanships in the District of Columbia Bankers Association.

Lacey, the new association first vice president, started with the old American National Bank in 1921. He became associated with Columbia National in 1923 and was elected cashier in 1930. He left Columbia on March 4, 1946, to become vice president of National Metropolitan Bank.

Fisher, the new second vice president, joined the Washington Loan & Trust Co. in 1914 and has served continuously since then except for Navy service in the World War I.

Gatley, reelected treasurer, has been associated with Lincoln National Bank since its establishment in March 25, 1890. He has been its vice president since 1922. He was elected treasurer of the Bankers Association in 1913 and has been renamed every year since.

Late Advance Cancels Early Stock Losses

New York, June 7 (AP).—The stock market barely managed to retain its balance this week.

A slow-moving advance in the final session Friday just about canceled earlier losses. It was the third successive week in which the share price average finished even with or better than the close of the period preceding. The Associated Press 60-stock composite was unchanged at 61.2.

Wall Street produced no decisive response to news of the week—favorable or unfavorable. Clamping a strait jacket on bullish enthusiasm was the persistence of doubts whether the tax and labor legislation would become law. Foreign developments also were an unsettling influence.

However, commission houses reported some customers were coming to believe that recent dim views of business prospects may have been over-pessimistic. One analyst noted that "everyone is preparing for a recession in the future but when what was once the future becomes the present, business is still good."

Customers' apathy toward market commitments was reflected in the week's volume of 3,209,250 shares traded—one of the smallest totals since the period ended October 14, 1944.

Wednesday drew the best activity of the week at 820,000 shares but a midday buying flurry evaporated and stocks lost ground as doubts were expressed whether the tax bill would be signed. Another noon rally on Thursday failed to hold, although Pere Marquette stocks jumped around 3 points on news the way was cleared for its merger with Chesapeake & Ohio, which was effected Friday.

Weekly Quotations on N. Y. Stock Exchange

Class 1 Rail Income Increased Over 1946

Class I railroads of the United States in April, 1947, had an estimated net income, after interest and rentals, of about $32,600,000 compared with a deficit of $19,320,000 in April, 1946, according to reports filed by the carriers with the Bureau of Railway Economics of the Association of American Railroads. Because of the coal strike in April 1946, railroad traffic and earnings in that month were considerably reduced.

In the first four months of 1947, they had an estimated net income, after interest and rentals, of 121 million dollars compared with a deficit of $100,000 in the corresponding period of 1946.

Empire Steel Head Quits Over Policy

Mansfield, Ohio, June 7 (AP).—The president and chairman of the board of the Empire Steel Corp. today resigned because of what he said were "differences among the board of directors regarding company policies."

In a statement made public today after a seven-hour session of the board last night, Joseph B. Montgomery, jr., declared:

"I have and always will uphold policies I consider good for the stockholders and employes, but I cannot support any policy to the contrary."

The resignation of the man who had been president of the Empire corporation for 10 years came within six weeks after election to the board of William J. Mericka of Cleveland, Charles J. Smith of Cleveland, and Lewis J. Thomas, a Philadelphia investment broker.

Town Seeks to Defer Removal of R. I. Mill

South Kingston, R. I., June 7 (AP).—The South Kingston Town Council last night authorized its president to confer with the head of J. P. Stevens & Co. in an effort to defer proposed removal of a large part of its Peace Dale mill to the South.

The superintendent of the mill was reported to have told the council that the company plans to move the worsted section of its plant, continuing only its woolen operations in Peace Dale. The plant now employs about 700.

Somerville to Direct Plymouth Auto Sales

Detroit, June 7 (AP).—Appointment of R. C. Somerville as general sales manager of the Plymouth division of Chrysler Corp. was announced today by Plymouth President D. S. Eddins.

Somerville began his automotive career as a stock clerk and later was engaged in hand-building experimental motors for race drivers.

Record Bus Shipments

Philadelphia, June 7 (AP).—ACF-Brill Motors Co. in May shipped 221 vehicles, the largest number of buses and trolley coaches of any month in its history, President R. R. Monoe reported today.

Truck Chase Nets 3 Men, Safe, Laundry

Four men in a laundry truck, complicated by a tombstone and two policemen, one of whom lost the seat of his pants, furnished a little 4 a. m. drama in the Northeast section yesterday.

Policemen F. G. Long and O. M. Neilson, Twelfth Precinct, were patroling along Rhode Island ave. ne. near Mount Harmony Cemetery. Theey spotteed a truck of the Pioneer Laundry, 920 Rhode Island ave.

They agreed it was an odd time of the morning for a laundry truck to be out and stopped it.

Three of the four riders scattered. The fourth tried to hide under some $2600 worth of laundry, but forgot to pull in his feet.

Of the three who fled—through the cemetery—one knocked himself out on a tombstone and was captured.

Patrolman Long captured a third, but not until he had lost the seat of his trousers on the spike of a fence. The fourth got away.

The truck had been stolen from a garage adjacent to the plant. Besides the laundry, police found in the truck a safe containing $141 in cash and $275 in jewelry.

Investigation disclosed the safe had been stolen from Hope's Windows, Inc., 721 Channing st. ne. The safe had not been opened.

The three suspects were held for investigation into other housebreaking cases last night. The fourth man was still sought.

Navy Gives Clean Bill to C-54 Planes

By The Associated Press

The Navy Air Transport Service announced yesterday it had given all its Douglas C-54 Skymasters a clean bill after an inspection of tail-assembly fittings.

The Army Air Forces Transport Command, meanwhile, continued a check of its C-54s. It said that a temporary grounding had been ordered, but it would not interrupt scheduled operations.

The Army-Navy order for a detailed inspection came after the Army's Wright Field reported a check there had shown looseness and shearing in bolts and vertical stabilizer attachment fittings in some planes.

An okay for the Navy planes was announced by Commander Tom South of the NATS, who said that "no weaknesses or troubles were revealed" in the check. He added:

"There has been no disruption of NATS schedules and no planes have been grounded."

No interruption of schedules was indicated by the Nation's commercial airlines, which operate C-54 Skymasters converted from the military type for domestic and international services. The Air Transport Association said tail-assembly inspections had been under way for some time.

Douglas Aircraft officials had said reinspection of "certain hinge bolts in portions of the tail assembly" of this type of plane had been ordered pending "completion of official investigations of the accident to the DC4 type of plane in Maryland recently." (The DC4 is the C-54 type of plane in commercial use.)

The Civil Aeronautics Administration also had ordered inspections.

The orders followed two of the worst commercial flying accidents in the Nation's history, both involving converted military type planes.

One of these took 53 lives when an Eastern Airlines plane crashed near Port Deposit, Md. Chairman James M. Landis of the Civil Aeronautics Board, said some failure in the tail structure was "clearly indicated."

Dairy Dispute Talks Here Go On Tomorrow

Negotiations will be resumed tomorrow between the Milk Drivers and Dairy Employes' Local, No. 246 (AFL) and Washington area dairy operators.

The union has asked for a five-day, 40-hour week, in place of the present six-day, 48-hour week.

A 15-day strike truce was voted Friday night by the union membership pending outcome of future negotiations. The members, however, authorized their negotiators to call a strike at any time within the 15 days if talks do not progress satisfactorily.

Nearly all major dairies are affected by the negotiations.

Taft Reminds Truman of 1945 Tax Cut for Corporations

By Jack Bell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Senator Taft (R., Ohio) yesterday demanded to know how President Truman can argue against a tax cut for individuals when he gave his blessing to one for corporations in 1945.

Pouring new ammunition into his running fight with Mr. Truman over economic issues, Taft told a reporter:

"It has been suggested by some that the President should veto the tax bill because it might lead to a deficit if we have a serious recession.

"But only two years ago the President recommended and approved a reduction of six billion dollars for the most part for corporations, when we faced a deficit of 20 billion dollars in the fiscal year, 1946."

Would Save Four Billions

The tax bill now before the President would save individuals about four billion dollars by reducing levies 10.5, 20 and 30 per cent in various brackets.

Taft asserted Friday that Mr. Truman and the Democratic Administration must bear the responsibility for "having created all the basic conditions which compel high prices."

Meanwhile, Taft began a new round in a battle which started last Tuesday with a jibe from Taft, was carried on Thursday by a hot news conference retort from the President and kept up to date Friday by the Ohio Senator's latest blast.

Taft argued that the way to get prices down—the core of his argument with the President—is to cut Government expenses and cut taxes." He added: "So let the President sign the tax bill."

Renewing this demand yesterday, Taft told a reporter he sees no reason why the President should deny individual taxpayers a substantial tax reduction similar to that given to business in the 1945 tax act which repealed the excess profits tax.

The 1945 tax bill cut levies for corporations more than $3,100,000,000. Individuals got reductions estimated at about $2,500,000,000.

Not Inflationary, He Says

Taft argued that tax cutting would not be inflationary because it does not increase costs nor demand for goods, but "simply shifts purchasing power from Government spending to private lending."

As for his economic theories, which Mr. Truman had called "fallacious and dangerous," Taft said the President had been "attributing to me a lot of economic views on wages and prices which I have never expressed."

He challenged the President to show that he ever had said anything justifying the following quotation in Mr. Truman's Thursday statement: "The Senator states that the only way to bring prices down is to reduce the demand for goods."

Taft said he had always argued that increased production was needed to keep prices down.

Nimitz Urges Early Action On Unification

By The Associated Press

Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Chief of Naval Operations, yesterday urged "early enactment" of legislation to unify the armed forces under a single Secretary of National Defense.

"Not until it is enacted can the military services function at full efficiency in the solution of the many urgent problems which are affected by its enactment," he said.

Nimitz made the comment in a letter to Chairman Gurney (R., S. Dak.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The admiral said the bill, which the committee approved 12 to 0 last Wednesday, is an improvement over that which the War and Navy Departments originally recommended to Congress.

While the Republican Policy Committee in the Senate has included the bill on its list of legislation to be acted upon before the summer recess, a companion bill is bogged down in the House.

Nimitz's letter to Gurney said in part:

"I believe that the changes made by the committee have improved the bill, and that, to an even greater extent than before, it will provide a much-needed program for the future security of the United States and a structure within which the United States Navy can continue effectively to discharge its responsibilities in connection with the national security.

"Early enactment of this legislation is most desirable . . ."

The principal changes made in the bill by the Senate committee were revisions in language designed to guarantee the future independence of the Marine Corps and of naval aviation.

The measure provides for a single Secretary of National Security, with separate branches and Undersecretaries for the Army, Navy and Air Corps.

Sen. Ellender Favors Veto Of Rent Bill

By the United Press

Senator Allen J. Ellender (D., La.) said last night that President Truman should veto the rent control bill which he said would enable landlords to "blackjack" their tenants.

A House-Senate conference committee is now compromising differences in the bills passed by the two Houses.

Ellender centered his fire on a provision approved by both the Senate and House which would authorize "voluntary" 15 per cent boosts where landlords and tenants agree to lease longer than one year.

Ellender's views were challenged by Senators Millard Tydings (D., Md.) and Clyde R. Hoey (D., N. C.)

Tydings said many apartment dwellers believed a rent increase would enable building owners to give them better service and redecorate. Hoey asserted that a rent increase is needed by widows and other women who depend on rental incomes.

House Expecting 'Real Fight' Tomorrow Over D. C. Taxes

trict Subcommittee which has been studying revenue needs for the District for four months, said he feels sure there will be little opposition to an increase of real estate taxes from $1.75 to $2.00.

But he grimly opposed any sales tax for the District, and said he would fight any effort to impose it here.

"A sales tax is an emergency measure to be used when all other means of taxation are exhausted," he said. "It is unjust and inequitable. It is a tax on the persons least able to pay.

Situation Isn't Critical

"The situation in Washington is not critical .The District's financial condition is excellent, perhaps the best in the United States from the standpoint of tax levies and ability of residents to meet requirements."

Horan acknowledged that some difficulty might be encountered in getting House members to support a sales tax.

Twenty-four States now have such taxes, ranging from ½ per cent in Indiana to 3 per cent in Horan's home State of Washington, Bates declared.

Bates may encounter difficulty in finding support for his income tax on the same basis, he said. Twenty-nine States have income taxes and two more have a form of the tax on investment income.

The bill provides that Washington residents not subject to an income tax elsewhere must pay it here. Residents will get a choice of payments. They can select their home States or the District, whichever is lower. And Bates said the tax here will be very low by comparison.

As for Horan's claims that schools need more funds than have been alloted by the budget, and therefore higher taxes, Bates declared that the 1948 budget already provides nine millions for school construction. The budget has a total of 23 millions for capital outlay in heavy construction during the next fiscal year, he said.

The income tax is expected to provide 3.1 millions. The substitute taxes would earn: liquor, 2.8 millions; cigarettes, $800,000, and amusements, one million.

Tired, "All-In"—Listless Feeling Brought To Halt

As Vibrant Energy is Released To Every Muscle, Fibre, Cell

Do you get up in the mornings still tired, feel down-and-out all day? Have you checked-up on your blood strength lately? Overwork, undue worry, cold, flu or other illness often wears down the red-blood-cells.

Every day—every hour—millions of tiny red-blood-cells must pour forth from the marrow of your bones to replace those that are worn-out. A low blood count may affect you in several ways: no appetite, underweight, no energy, a run-down condition, lack of resistance to infection and disease.

To get real relief you must keep up your blood strength. Medical authorities, by analysis of the blood, have by positive proof shown that S.S.S. Tonic is amazingly effective in building up low blood strength in non-organic nutritional anemia. This is due to the S.S.S. Tonic formula which contains special and potent activating ingredients.

Also, S.S.S. Tonic helps you enjoy the food you eat by increasing the gastric digestive juice when it is non-organically too little or scanty—thus the stomach will have little cause to get balky with gas, bloat and give off that sour food taste.

Don't wait! Energize your body with rich, red-blood. Start on S.S.S. Tonic now. As vigorous blood surges throughout your whole body, greater freshness and strength should make you eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better, have a healthy color glow in your skin—firm flesh fill out hollow places. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle from your drug store. S.S.S. Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

U. S. Research Workers Sell Inventions

By Robert E. Nichols

Department of Justice recommendations that the Federal Government retain exclusive patent rights on all inventions stemming from its multibillion-dollar research and develoment program—including atomic energy studies—were made public last night by the White House.

Attorney General Tom C. Clark made the recommendations in a three-volume report to President Truman on Government patent practices and policy.

He informed the President that some Federal research workers—particularly on Army and Navy payrolls—are selling their inventions for private gains, while others stand to make private fortunes once their wartime inventions are freed from secrecy.

Public Funds Used

Clark took the position that inventions financed with public funds should not become a "purely private monopoly" and urged the President to order a uniform patent policy preventing such practices within the executive departments and agencies.

The Attorney General specifically recommended that the Government obtain "all rights" to inventions made by its employes during working hours, or with the aid of Federal funds and equipment, or having a direct relation to the employ's official functions.

Clark held that "the ownership of patent rights is not a necessary form of incentive to the great majority of Government scientists and technicians." Patent rights, he said, are, in fact, "an undesirable form of incentive because they may induce lack of cooperation and secretiveness among research workers; may unduly emphasize the patentable phases of their work."

Asks Bonuses, Promotions

He recommended that a general system of cash bonuses, promotions and salary increases for meritorious suggestions or ideas, "regardless of whether they are patentable or not," would provide the desired incentive and "may tend to remedy any inadequacies in the salary structure."

The 1000-page report, which was begun in 1943 at the request of President Roosevelt, indicated a sharp difference of opinion between the Justice Department and the War and Navy Departments.

The report said that the War and Navy Departments—the biggest Government spenders for research—"still contend that patent rights must be left to the employe in order to induce him to invent."

Policeman Attends Own 'Memorial'

Did you ever wonder what it would be like to attend your own funeral?

Something like that happened yesterday to Harry Strong, 54-year-old Falls Church (Va.) policeman and veteran of both World Wars.

He was honored with a "Harry Strong Day," which had been planned by the City of Falls Church last February when it was thought that he was not going to live.

Strong, who endeared himself to Falls Church citizens through his work with the local schoolboy patrol, was stricken with a heart attack February 14 while cruising in a Falls Church squad car. He spent eight weeks recuperating in the Bethesda Naval Hospital and returned to active duty April 12.

The town decided to honor him anyway.

Grinning, obviously enjoying the occasion, he umpired the baseball game played by the 30-odd boys and girls of the patrol behind the Falls Church American Legion Post headquarters, 610 Fulton ave.

He dished out ice cream, pop and pies donated by local mechants. He set off 50-yard dash events, and supervised rope-skipping.

"Folks here thought I was a goner, but I fooled 'em," he said happily.

In the contests yesterday, Robert Speich, Jerry Rosson and Jeannine Strachan won the 50-yard dashes; Don Carmon received the door prize—a tom-tom.

GREENBELT—The Boondoggle That Made Good

Aerial Photograph by Wendell H. Moore

IT IS OBVIOUS ENOUGH from the air that Greenbelt didn't just accumulate like an ordinary town—that it was planned down to the last square foot of sod. Its spokelike layout around the central arc provides the spaciousness that was a primary goal

BUT ONLY A DOZEN years ago it was derisively labeled "Tugwelltown" and was the rough expanse of Maryland farmland which workmen are shown clearing above. Below, the child care center of today's Greenbelt, where tiny youngsters can be parked from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Federal Town of 8000 Nears Happy 10th Birthday

By Gerald C. Gross
Post Reporter

APPROACHING its tenth anniversary is Greenbelt, one of the most interesting experiments of the early New Deal.

Greenbelt—or Tugwelltown, as it was called for a while—home of 1900 families, the Federal Government's best example of communal life, started out as a boondoggle but flourished and prospered in a manner to confound its critics.

Situated in Prince Georges County, Md., 14 miles from the heart of Washington, Greenbelt has long since disproved the implication of impermanency which the nickname "Tugwelltown" carried. Today it is a going concern, with a long waiting list of prospective tenants. Its troubles are mainly little ones—youngsters who daub statuary with green paint, fall out of trees and play in the roadways.

Population of Greenbelt is now about 8000. The town directory, beginning with Abramowitz and ending with Zuccaro, reveals the diversified descents of the burghers. In between are such family names as Ehrhardt, Murphy, Comploier, MacGregor, Tchikoff, Van Deusen and (one each) Cohen and Kelly.

Theirs is a community without a jail, where there has been only one traffic fatality in the decade of its existence; where one-half the population are children; heads of three families out of four are on Uncle Sam's payroll, and the same percentage displayed blue-star service flags in World War II.

On Memorial Day Greenbelt dedicated a granite memorial to its war dead, and a few hours later, opened the swimming pool for the season. The Greenbelt Health Association, a prepayment plan for medical care, is reported to be in a "ticklish situation." Interest is mounting steadily in the biennial municipal election which will be held September 16. Folks have their baby-sitter problems . . . a bigger food market is needed . . . benefit parties are being given to raise money to equip the rescue squad ambulance.

Test Tube Town

THAT'S Greenbelt, so much like the average small town in Indiana or Vermont and yet so different in many ways. The nature of its conception—to provide work for thousands of jobless in depression days—and the extraordinary character of its operation due to the fact that it is in Federal ownership, make Greenbelt "different" in spite of itself.

Add to that the fact that Greenbelt was—and still is—an experimental laboratory in large-scale, moderate-rental public housing and that all of its inhabitants are guinea pigs for the testing of schemes in education, recreation, merchandising, medical care and what-not—well, it is evident that here is something which, for all its typicalness, is still a thing apart.

Greenbelt has been the subject of innumerable themes and theses by high school and college students. Laboriously the authors delved into the socio-economic aspects of the project, the political ramifications of a council-manager type of government, and all that heavy stuff. Some of them, recognizing the importance of giving their papers a human touch, engaged James T. Gobbel in conversation on his favorite topic.

"But don't get me too wound up on Greenbelt," says the thirtyish administrator with a broad grin. "If you do, I'll never stop."

A Gobbel Decade

HIS enthusiasm dates back to the time when he was in the Resettlement Administration and his boss, Rexford Guy Tugwell, sold President Roosevelt on the idea of a model housing project near Washington that would give work to a lot of men and, at the same time, provide good dwellings for families of moderate means. Also, it would put a theory or two to the test.

The Government acquired 3300 acres adjacent to Berwyn Heights, Md., and the first spadeful of earth was turned on October 12, 1935. Actually the ground-breaking was done not with a spade but a pick ax, swung by the ubiquitous George E. Allen in his capacity as Works Progress Administrator for the District.

Just three days later, what had been advance-billed as a "mass protest" against the project was made to the Prince Georges County Commissioners. When all were inside and the doors closed, one solitary dissenter faced the officials. He was Lansdale G. Sasscer, then president of the State Senate.

Today Sasscer, a member of Congress whose district includes Prince Georges, is one of Greenbelt's most stalwart supporters, would like to forget that he once opposed the venture.

Another critic of the unborn Greenbelt was Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia. His blasts were directed at the project's cost but they stemmed largely from a personal feud with Henry A. Wallace, then Secretary of Agriculture.

Getting back to Gobbel, he was in on the Greenbelt plan from its blueprint stage. In October, 1943, he took over the dual job of Federal manager and town manager. In the one capacity he was landlord, in behalf of the Federal Public Housing Authority; in the other, he was the town's top administrator, appointed by the popularly elected five-man council.

Just a year ago the dual job was split and Gobbel stayed on as town manager, a $6500 position, relinquishing his duties as Federal manager to Charles M. Cormack. Last month, in the climax to an intracouncil dispute, Gobbel submitted his resignation. It is effective September 30.

The Personal Touch

THE new town council which will be elected September 16 may reappoint Gobbel. Or it may pick someone else. Come what may, he was, is and will continue to be Greenbelt's No. 1 horn tooter.

As he walks through the town square, there is scarcely a person he meets whom he does not know by name. Proudly he takes you to the fire house to display the rescue squad ambulance which four tenants, former GIs, bought with funds they raised and pooled.

Why did Greenbelt have so many poliomyelitis cases last year, Mr. Gobbel?

"Yes, we did have 13 of them," he says. "But who knows why the disease strikes harder in some places than others? Besides, only a very few of our cases got a paralysis."

Juvenile delinquency, how about that?

"No problem there," according to the town manager. "I can think of only one serious case since I've been here. That was a teen-age boy who stole some things. He reformed so thoroughly that a certain youth organization"—Gobbel did not wish to identify the lad too closely—"has honored him by electing him president."

He is proud of the community church—"Do you realize that its members represent 23 denominations?"—and the work being done by its pastor, who was a Navy chaplain in the South Pacific. He gets a kick out of the Greenbelt band, composed chiefly of teen-age boys and girls, and its "feeder" band of tikes—most of them just valve-high to a tuba—who graduate eventually into the big band.

Not Half Developed

FOR a change of pace, get Gobbel to talking statistics.

"The original Greenbelt consisted of 885 houses and apartments. Then there were five farm-type dwellings that were on the reservation when the Government took over. You get an even 900 by adding the 10 privately built and owned houses that were erected on land leased from FPHA. On top of that, you have the 1000 defense homes that were built here in 1941 and 1942 to relieve the housing shortage."

An Old Program Arouses New Fears

Latin Arms Plan Merely 'Little U.N.'

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

WHEN President Truman late last month asked Congress to authorize the United States to take the lead in Western Hemisphere military collaboration, he stirred up no end of comment, speculation and criticism. All this was somewhat astonishing in view of what had gone before.

The idea of establishing a solid military front in this hemisphere is more than two years old, having been a focal point of the Act of Chapultepec, signed by the United States and most of her Latin-American neighbors in March, 1945. The request for authorization to carry out this Nation's part of that agreement had been sent to Congress in May, 1946, stirring hardly a ripple. Last February the State Department announced an agreement with Canada to work toward eventual standardization of arms, organizations and procedures.

Why, then, should this most recent retelling of an old story arouse such a to-do?

It is not easy to say why. But one may put one's fingers readily enough on those features of the proposal which evoked the most criticism and the most disquiet. The following fears were voiced:

1. That supplying arms to Latin-American countries would start an armament race which soon could get out of control.

2. That sending modern weapons into some Latin-American countries would simplify seizure of power by revolutionary juntas, a fear emphasized by the recent coup of Samoza in Nicaragua.

3. That collaboration would be necessary with the ideologically unacceptable government of Peron in the Argentine.

4. That such an arrangement would lead to United States domination of its Southern neighbors.

5. That Russia wouldn't like it.

Even Swap of Arms

BEFORE taking up those objections in detail, it might be well to review briefly just what the program of hemisphere cooperation is, how it would be accomplished, and where it is expected to lead.

The program provides that the United States, in consultation with representatives of the nations involved, would determine the strength of military units to be maintained, their types and their equipment. We would then supply arms and equipment for those units out of war surplus, receiving in turn, weapon for weapon, arms already in possession of the nation being aided. Thus the actual number of arms would not be increased, though their overall efficiency would be.

The United States then would send military missions into the cooperating country to train its armed forces according to our doctrine. Officers and enlisted technicians of that nation would be sent to schools in the United States to learn our staff and command procedures and to familiarize themselves with the operation, maintenance and tactical employment of the arms and equipment they were receiving from us.

There would be no obligation upon any country to accept so much as one rifle or one adviser. No country need limit its military establishment to the size recommended by this Nation. Any country might buy arms and equipment anywhere in the world to supplement that received from us.

And it may be remarked parenthetically that, with modern weapons and equipment, the same military strength may be achieved with considerably less manpower than is maintained at present, thus lessening the financial burden on those Latin-American countries which took part in the program.

Well-Barred Back Door

THE objective of the program is purely defensive. It would not necessarily follow that a single Latin-American division would take part in any expeditionary force the United States might mount.

But in the event of another world holocaust the back door to the United States would be closed and locked. The military forces to the south of us would not be a heterogeneous collection of men with dissimilar weapons, using different ammunition, trained in the tactical and logistic methods of a half-dozen schools of military thought. They would be one army, capable of rapid concentration and easy control, readily man-

Ocean Air Transport Is Prize In 2 Fights Knotting Congress

By John W. Ball

TWO HARDY perennials as annoying as dandelions are taking up a lot of congressional time these days.

JUAN TRIPPE

Both deal with international aviation. They are:

1. Shall all American-owned international airlines be merged into one "chosen instrument," jointly owned by air, surface and rail interests and the public?

2. Shall America's merchant marine be permitted to operate international airlines as foreign ship lines do?

No. 1 is synonymous with Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan American Airways. Time after time Trippe's idea has been knocked down and apparently disposed of, only to pop up again as lively as ever.

Its hardiness is shown in the number of lawmakers willing to tie their names to the measure. Identical merger bills have been sponsored in the House by Representatives Wolverton (R., N. J.), Hinshaw (R., Calif.), Harris (D., Ark.) and Howell (R., Ill.); in the Senate by Senators White (R., Me.), Brewster (R., Me.), McCarran (D., Nev.) and McMahon (D., Conn.).

The House Commerce Committee has already completed lengthy hearing on the bill; the Senate committee is just now repeating the process.

Briefly, the measure would merge all American-owned international air carriers. Ownership would be limited to 3 per cent for any American individual or corporation.

Domestic airlines would be held to an over-all 25 per cent interest in the overseas line; the railroads would be allowed 10 per cent and ocean shipping companies 20 per cent. The remaining 45 per cent would be sold to the public.

$ Sea-Air Bills

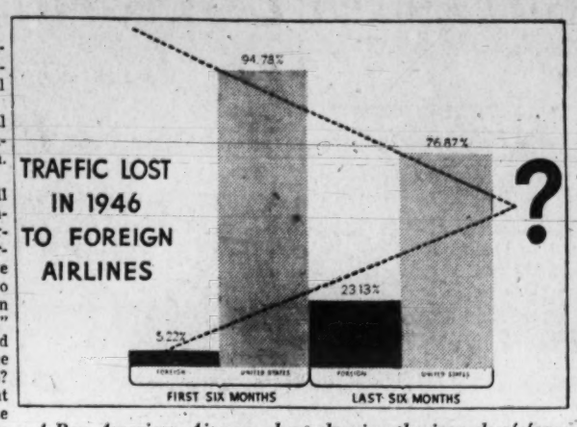
FOR NO. 2, the sea-air proposal, the House Commerce Committee has been studying bills by Representatives Celler (D., N. Y.), Miller (R., Conn.) and Bradley, deceased (R., Mich.). All three direct the Civil Aeronautics Board to give the same weight to airline applications from surface shipping companies as to other applications. They would amend the Civil Aeronautics Act to remove any legal barriers.

Meanwhile, foreign competition is getting keener. Foreign flag planes handled only 5.22 per cent of the traffic in and out of New York in the first six months of 1946. This year they are handling almost 25 per cent.

In the first six months of 1946 American airlines flew 35,871 overseas passengers in and out of New York and foreign lines only 1974. In the last half of 1946 the United States lines handled 51,060 passengers but the foreign lines carried 15,529.

Britain's BOAC is plastering American magazines and newspapers with attractive advertisements. Air France is telling the American tourist that he's practically in Paris when he steps into an Air France plane.

Nineteen airlines from 15 foreign countries now hold 33 route permits into this country. On the red hot North Atlantic route, Pan American, American Overseas and TWA are bucking the BOAC, Denmark's DDL, Air France, Belgium's Sabina, Norway's DNL, Holland's KLM and Sweden's SILA.



A Pan American Airways chart showing the inroads of foreign competition, suggests an ominous conclusion

Monopoly Charge

TRIPPE stands virtually alone in his fight for the Chosen Instrument. Only one other airline chief, W. A. Patterson of United, has backed his argument that a united front is necessary if this country is to hold its own in the international air race.

Patterson's chief aim, however, is to keep American international airlines out of the much more lucrative domestic field, where United has a top place.

Chairman James M. Landis of the CAB, State Department officials and many other officials and industrial spokesmen have joined the other airlines in attacking the Trippe measure.

The opposition was summed up last week by C. R. Smith, board chairman of American Airlines:

"If United States aviation could spend more time flying and less time fighting monopoly legislation, it would be much better off!"

In the battle to permit shipping companies to enter air transportation, the big ship lines banded together six years ago into the "Sea-Air Committee" to fight CAB refusal to grant them air licenses. They are opposed by the Air Transport Association, whose argument is also "monopoly."

Admiral W. W. Smith, Maritime Commission chairman, and officials of the New York Port Authority, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the CIO supported the sea-air bill before the House Commerce Committee.

The State Department took a noncommital attitude; Justice opposed it on antimonopoly grounds. CAB Chairman Landis took no part, all the CAB hearings on the question having been held before he became a member. However, the CAB did oppose the measure through Oswald Ryan, on the grounds that there are statutory obstacles to airline operation by surface carriers.

A report by the House committee, probably favorable to both bills, is the most that is expected this session. Informal polls indicate the committee will support the measures. If so the way will be cleared for a fight to the finish next session.

Now the Railroads

A BILL permitting railroad lines to own domestic airlines also is before Congress. Offered by Representative Cole (R., Kans.), it would rescind laws prohibiting railroads from operating scheduled passenger-carrying airlines.

One railroad already is operating a domestic airline. The Santa Fe has an air-freight line from Chicago to the Pacific Coast, known as Santa Fe Skyways, Inc. It is a "fixed base" operator but doesn't operate on fixed schedules.

Santa Fe Skyways has four DC-4s and three DC-3s.

Union Boss Bargains— For $700 a Month Pay

By Fred J. Zusy

CHICAGO, June 7 (AP).—David L. Behncke, veteran head of the Air Line Pilots Association, is sitting around conference tables again, attempting to get pilots' pay raised to an average of $700 a month.

Behncke, who was 50 on May 1 and recently was elected to his ninth two-year term as $15,000-a-year president of the ALPA, estimates he has spent three years and 177 days in conference rooms. He is its first and only president.

Flying in the early days of the ALPA was a far hop from present-day commercial aviation, with its Wall Street finance, fleets of giant planes, pretty hostesses and limousine-to-airport service.

When the ALPA was formed in 1931, with its office a typewriter in the front room of Behncke's small home near Chicago Municipal Airport, aviation was just leaving behind its baling wire "crates," barnstorming and stunt days.

Membership in the pioneer group which began with 60 pilots, was kept secret at first because, Bhncke says, "we weren't received on very friendly terms by the companies."

. . . 3½ years in conference

Active membership is restricted to pilots on scheduled air carrier craft. In 1936 there were 700 members. Today there are 7000. Behncke says this includes 97 per cent of all commercial pilots.

The association now is sprawled over a West 63rd st. neighborhood a mile or so from the airport, housed in five separate offices. It has a staff of 44, but not one paid organizer. Presently it is emphasizing organization of ground crew employes of the major airlines.

Behncke flew actively for 25 years until he was forced to give it up because of ALPA demands on his time. He learned to fly during the First World War, rising from enlisted man to Army test pilot.

Fire and Lighting

BEHNCKE and the ALPA place foremost in their fight for safety and welfare of pilots

1. A "politically independent" Air Safety Board.
2. Elimination of fire hazards.
3. Installation of "adequate and efficient" runway and approach lighting at airfields.

A conservative man, Behncke has no wild dreams about the future of commercial aviation. He doesn't look for many more planes or increases in personnel.

Planes 25 years from now will be on the whole larger and speedier, "but not as big or as fast as people think," Behncke says. He envisions planes carrying around 75 passengers, some with a capacity of 100 to 150, powered by gas turbine and jet propulsion and cruising from 400 to 500 miles an hour.

First pilots, according to ALPA figures, have been earning about $600 a month and copilots, $220 to $380. New contracts have been signed with several airlines, boosting this to $700 and $280-$440, respectively. Behncke is negotiating with other companies for similar boosts.

These salaries are not too high, the ALPA believes, because of the rigid qualifications for pilots and their lengthy training.

Stories of pilots earning $15,000 a year are not a fair picture, he says. A few do come close to this figure, but this top salary is possible only to men who have been first pilots for at least eight years and do their flying at night over the ocean.

82 Guilty in 1973 Cases

The South Does Convict Lynchers, But Odds Are 99 to 1 in Their Favor

By Romney Wheeler

ATLANTA, June 7 (AP).—Can the South convict its lynchers?

Despite South Carolina's acquittal of 28 white men, 26 of whom acknowledged participation in a lynch-murder, the answer is "Yes." But it must be followed with prompt qualification: Convictions are rare and unlikely.

Although lynching has diminished rapidly since 1922, the brutal business of fagot and rope and trial by fury has persisted in the South. Perpetrators have had a 99 to 1 chance of going free.

Even where there is determined prosecution, as in the unprecedented mass trial at Greenville, it is difficult to obtain convictions. Southern juries—neighbors and townspeople of the accused—are reluctant to return a "guilty" verdict for a crime tolerated by "Southern tradition."

Only 82 Convictions

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, which keeps the nearest to official statistics, reports 1973 persons lynched in the United States since 1900. Against that total only 82 convictions have been obtained. A majority of the lynchings were in the South, and 67 of the convictions were in Southern States.

James Harmon Chadbourn, formerly of the University of North Carolina law department, estimates that less than 1 per cent of lynchings in the United States have been followed by convictions.

The reasons, he says, are not obscure. First, there is the refusal of persons with first-hand knowledge to testify. Second, trial juries frequently act upon local prejudice instead of considered evidence. Third, grand juries frequently refuse to indict. Fourth, prosecuting officers usually are disinclined to investigate and police officers are "unable" to identify mob members. Last, higher courts often reverse convictions on non-prejudicial error.

Alabama probably has the South's best record of convictions. In 1919 and 1920, quick and determined action by Gov. Thomas E. Kilby resulted in conviction of 31 lynchers. Twenty eight were given sentences ranging from $100 fines to 15 years in prison, and three others were given $100 fines and up to three months in jail.

Previously, Alabama had convicted three lynchers in 1900, sentencing them to 10 years to life. In 1924 a National Guardsman was convicted on a lynching charge and sentenced to 18 years, but the trial court's judgment was reversed. In 1925 three other convictions were reversed after five appeals.

Thus Alabama returned convictions in the ratio of one for every 10 persons lynched since 1900—a high percentage in the South.

7-Year 'Life'

NO convicted lyncher, however, ever has been sentenced to death.

In records of the Southern Regional Council, Georgia is the only Southern State to have meted out straight life sentences for lynching. These were assessed in 1930, when Thomas County residents became incensed over two lynchings in three days.

The border State of Oklahoma convicted seven lynchers in 1922, and sentenced all seven to life imprisonment.

The Georgia case had a nullifying sequel. Although two men were sentenced to life for lynching a Negro who had testified against a white men charged with raping a young Negro mother, both were paroled after only seven years.

One dropped out of sight. The parole of the other was twice revoked and twice reinstated. Finally, in 1946, a warrant was issued for a third revocation after Florida convicted him of receiving stolen property. The warrant still stands, unserved, with the notation, "Cannot be found."

Georgia convicted three other lynchers in 1922, sentencing them to from one to four years, and in 1926 two lynchers were sentenced to four years each. In 1943 a Georgia sheriff was prosecuted in United States District Court, and sentenced to three years imprisonment and $1000 fine. His conviction, however, was set aside by the United States Supreme Court.

No Prison Record

AT Manchester, Tenn., in 1934, eight lynchers were convicted and sentenced to from three to five years each—but there is no record of terms being served.

In South Carolina, three men were convicted of manslaughter in 1941 after the fatal beating of a Negro at Georgetown. The case was appealed, and here, too, there is no record of time served.

Texas has a record of five convictions—three in 1920 in which the sentence was two years, suspended; and two in 1930 where the lynchers got two years each. Virginia convicted two persons in 1923, and sentenced them to from one to two years.

North Carolina, which has had no lynching since 1935, is particularly proud of its record. Although 99 lynchings have been charged to the State since 1900, its Governors have acted swiftly to prosecute where it was possible to do so. Four white men were imprisoned for an unsuccessful attempt to remove a Negro from Buncombe County Jail in 1925. When they applied for clemency, the late Gov. A. W. McLean said:

"When the State of North Carolina takes a prisoner into custody, it then becomes responsible for his safety, and that responsibility remains until his case is disposed of in accordance with law. A prisoner in custody of the law is entitled to the same protection as is the judge on the bench, or the solicitor who represents the State in the prosecution."

Although North Carolina insists it was a simple killing, and not a lynching, the State is credited by Tuskeegee Institute with swift punishment for four white men who were sentenced to from 10 to 25 years for killing a Negro near Gastonia, N. C., in 1941.

Educational Parallel

AT LEAST three of the defendants in the Greenville, S. C., mass trial were illiterate, a fourth acknowledged a second-grade education, and a fifth had gone through the third grade. Thomas Wofford, leading defense attorney, observed later that he believed education for both races eventually would be the solution to lynching.

In this connection, the Southern Regional Council quotes statistics showing that the 12 States leading in lynching since 1882 are the same 12 which rank lowest in education.

Lynchings, 1882-1946—Mississippi, 574; Georgia, 525; Texas, 498; Louisiana, 391; Alabama, 346; Arkansas, 285; Florida, 281; Tennessee, 250; Kentucky, 205; South Carolina, 159; North Caroline, 99; Virginia 99.

Education Inex (1946)—Mississippi, 68; Alabama, 73; Arkansas, 73; Kentucky, 74; South Carolina, 75; Georgia, 77; Tennessee, 83; Louisiana, 85; Virginia, 86; North Carolina, 86; Florida, 87; Texas, 91. (National average 100.)

Proposals for Federal anti-lynching laws have been bitterly opposed by Southern Congressmen and Senators, often with filibusters. However, many sincere law enforcement officers doubt that Federal statutes would greatly increase convictions.

These officials observe that even if Federal agents brought charges, and a Federal grand jury indicted, defendants still would be tried in their United States District Court, before juries chosen from their own people.

They agree, however, that Federal statutes would greatly increase the risk of complaisant sheriffs and their deputies, who surrender prisoners without bona fide efforts to protect them.

Jailed for Contempt

OTHER remedies have been proposed, and in some instances successfully tried. One of these is citation for contempt of court. The United States Supreme Court held Tennessee lynchers in contempt when a Negro was slain in 1906 after the high court granted a stay of execution. In 1901, Judge Enson of Alabama sentenced several witnesses for contempt in refusing to testify in a lynch investigation.

Another—infrequently used—is the injunction. This was invoked in 1922 by Judge Blanton Fortson of Athens, Ga., in restraining certain named persons from further violence against a Negro.

South Carolina officials believe the Greenville verdict would have been the same anywhere south of the Mason-Dixon line, except, possibly, by a blue ribbon jury. In this connection, some Southern authorities have suggested that lynchings be investigated under direction of the chief justice of the State's highest appellate court, with a list of jurors drawn from as many adjoining counties as the court saw fit. Prosecution would be headed by the State attorney general.

Quick change of venue for accused prisoners, to avoid lynch tension, also has been urged, along with mandatory suspension of sheriffs from whom prisoners are taken.

One of the biggest obstacles to any State prosecution, however, is the attitude of some local enforcement officers.

Contrary to popular notion, less than one fourth of the persons lynched were accused of assaults on women. The Southern Regional Council lists the accusations as: rape and attempted rape, 24 per cent; murder, 37 per cent, and all others, 39 per cent.

3 New Omens Of Recession

THREE straws in the economic breeze:

1. Marriner S. Eccles, Federal Reserve Board Chairman, has told a group of Congressmen that deflation is now "inevitable"—and the sooner it comes "the less painful."

2. A forthcoming Commerce Department report on business profits for the first quarter of 1947 will show them at an historic high—on either a before or after-tax basis.

The report will say a large part of these profits are being held by corporations instead of being paid out to stockholders. Some Government analysts are expressing concern over these and other idle "savings."

3. Many Government economists say a decline in this country's exports, now running at a rate of nearly 20 billion dollars a year, seems certain.

With foreign countries selling us $7,500,000,000 worth of year, they're running out of means of paying for the difference, even when United States loans are taken into consideration.

A sharp cutback in exports could turn the recession forecast in some quarters into something much worse.

Permanent 'Business Managers' Urged for Federal Departments

By Clarke Beach

SOME of the ablest Washington officials feel that between the policy-making men—the Cabinet officers and administrators—and the two million employes in the vast Federal executive organization, there is an enormous gap which should be filled with a new variety of public servants.

They contend there should be a pool of highly qualified general managers responsible for the everyday business of the agencies. They would provide continuity in administration when changes in policy-making officials occur.

Navy Secretary Forrestal has become one of the chief proponents of this idea. Arthur S. Flemming, Civil Service Commissioner, is another ardent advocate.

It is not a new theory. It has been talked about for decades. It was strongly recommended in 1941 by President Roosevelt's Commission on Civil Service Improvement.

But Forrestal and many prominent businessmen like him who entered the Government during the war feel that each year the need becomes more acute.

British Too Static

A PERMANENT undersecretary in each department, such as the British have, is not the idea. The career administrators' job would be simply to keep the agencies running according to the policies set by the President's appointees. The policy would alter with the changing will of the people as expressed in elections.

Miss Frances Perkins, former Labor Secretary and now a Civil Service Commissioner, told me the American people would not put up with the static type of government administration which the British system tends to produce.

"We don't sit quietly by when the Postoffice or Labor Department is badly run," she said. "We are more critical, more conscious of administration. But the British would be inclined to say 'Ah yes, the postal service is bad. But it has been for a long time, and I presume it cannot be helped.

"When I first went to the Labor Department, every time I tried to make a change they would shake their heads.

" 'No, no, no. Regulations. The Comptroller. Congress.'

"It took us the largest part of the first two years to find out we could do the things they had said we couldn't do."

Forrestal found that when he and former Secretary Knox first went to the department, "there was no high-ranking civilian official to whom we could turn for administrative advice."

Businessman-Admiral

FORRESTAL has gone as far as he can to reform his own department in this respect. In February he appointed Wilfred J. McNeill as his administrative assistant, responsible for fiscal affairs, administrative procedures and assignment of personnel. McNeill is a man of considerable business experience and was a rear admiral in the Navy Supply Corps during the war.

There are, in fact, a number of men in McNeill's relative position in various agencies. Among them are William A. Jump, budget officer of the Agriculture Department; Bernard L. Gladieux, executive assistant to the Commerce Secretary, and James E. Dodson, chief clerk and budget officer of the Labor Department.

The trouble is that there are not enough men of their caliber available.

Forrestal's idea is to have a pool of 100 to 200 able administrators who would make government their career. They would have permanent Civil Service status. If a new Cabinet officer didn't like the man he found on the job, he could get another one and send his man back into the pool.

Need Private Incomes

A SALARY considerably above the present $10,000 limit would have to be paid to hold such men, but Forrestal feels the Government would never pay enough to compete with business. He says men interested in such a career probably should have additional incomes of at least $5000 a year.

Some of them, at least, should have had wide experience in business before settling down into Government, he believes.

"Too often," he declared, "our career Government men are the philosophical, contemplative type, who are repelled by the idea of competitive private business."

Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Public Works Administrator, points out on the other hand that many businessmen failed when brought into big Government positions during the war. In business, he explained, the boss' word is final, but in Government delicate acrobatics are essential—to deal with other agencies, with Congress and with the White House.

Civil Service Commissioner Flemming believes the key to the whole problem of increasing Government efficiency is to provide incentive for initiative and leadership.

"This proposal for a pool of highly qualified administrators is the best approach to the whole incentive idea," he says.

Gift of Tongues Isn't Free

THE "six easy lessons" lure for those who want to become expert linguists overnight has been exposed at the City College of New York. According to Professor Ephraim Cross of the Romance Languages department, the so-called "Army-method" or "quickie" courses have reached the proportions of a major racket.

Large-scale training of diplomats and business executives through short-cut conversational courses is now being offered throughout the country. According to Professor Cross many of these courses are more likely to create confusion than understanding.

Cross, whose writing on language studies in the armed forces were cited by the Office of War Information, has been praised by leading language authorities for his work in exposing linguistic frauds. Among those who are in agreement with his attack on the language "vitamin racket" are H. L. Mencken, Dean Harry Carman of Columbia University and Lieut. Col. Lachlan M. Sinclair of the Army's Military Intelligence Language School.

Professor Cross asserted that "catchwords like 'Army methods' and 'intensive' have been wildly and indiscriminately broadcast on a confused and credulous public." He pointed out that even trained linguists could not hope to learn an unfamiliar foreign language in less than a year.

In spite of this, some conversational courses hold out the promise of a working knowledge of a foreign tongue to the layman within a matter of weeks.

"Even during the war," the professor continued, "high-speed conversational courses were found inadequate for military intelligence work. They were able to serve only the purpose of the combat soldier who needed to know how to ask for road directions or simple information. In ordinary peacetime travel, a superficial fluency, such as gained from quickie courses, is bound to lead to confusion and misunderstanding."

Engineering Embraces the Humanities

By Fred M. Hechinger

ENGINEERING is America's great skill and achievement. Our high standard of living depends on it. Without it, victory in the war would not have been possible. Engineering education is perhaps America's most tangible, original contribution to the field of higher learning. From all countries students flock to American engineering schools.

The first school of engineering was founded at Troy, N. Y., in 1824 by Stephen van Rensselaer, educator, industrialist, soldier and politician. He founded the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute to "apply science to the common purposes of life." In 1835 the school granted the first engineering degree to be given in the English-speaking world.

STEPHEN VAN RENSSELAER
. . . Father of engineering

Up to that time scholars and scientists had worked in occasional fund-starved laboratories. Many of their findings remained buried there. Now the engineering college had come, to experiment with expanded facilities and to cooperate with industry.

"The nearly 125 years which have passed since," a faculty member of R. P. I. said recently, "have been vastly productive. They have, in fact, changed the world."

In 1924 recognition came from a high source. "R. P. I. deserves our gratitude," said Herbert Hoover. "From her sons and her influence has grown that great spread of engineering schools in our country and that army of half a million trained engineers who have built our transportation, our communications and our industries."

'Civilized' Scientists

TODAY R. P. I.'s 150-acre campus on that rugged plateau above the Hudson is a site of new growth and activity. In the postwar rush, enrollment has jumped from 1450 to 3450. Represented are 46 States and 45 foreign countries.

Methods of instruction remain unchanged, however. Students learn by solving problems, spend a major part of their time in the laboratory. An ideal ratio of one instructor for every 10 students has been maintained.

Looking beyond their test tubes, the man of R. P. I. found that even technicians need more today than scientific knowledge and skill. R. P. I. therefore demands that its graduates "have a broad understanding of the implications of civilized living if they are to be entrusted with the instruments, powerful beyond imagination, which have been fashioned by contemporary science and technology."

A few weeks ago at a cocktail party this reporter stood next to a chemistry instructor of a reputable college. Casually the scientist took up a book from the table, looked at the cover. "Spinoza," he spelled out, straining his highly specialized memory. "Oh yes, he's one of those vague, philosophical fellows, isn't he?"

Lusty Humor

IN ITS plan to turn out engineers who are citizens, R. P. I. emphasizes extracurricular activities. R. P. I. students edit the Pup, a magazine "whose humor will appeal to healthy-minded engineers." And—more explicitly—they add: "We may occasionally be profane but never obscene."

Dr. Livingston W. Houston, R. P. I.'s president, calls for a maximum of out-of-the-classroom activities to "help train for leadership and provide stimulation, inward satisfaction and values." He points to the school's 42 student organizations and promises them "pleasant and adequate meeting places."

This year R. P. I. has set out on a "human relations program" which simply admits that the world's greatest need is for people to get along with one another. Said one of America's leading industrial executives at an R. P. I. conference: "I can speak of some 12,000 engineers I have known in company relations. There have been few difficulties because of lack in technical or professional skill. In almost every case of failure the problem has been one of human relations."

Applied Science

WITH more than 1000 married veterans, R. P. I. not only had its own problems in human relations, but a desperate housing shortage as well. The answer to that very practical engineering problem was a two-million-dollar on-the-campus housing project which will accommodate 380 families and 750 single students. A unit with two bedrooms, bath, living room and kitchen rents for $25 a month. Last month the Rensselaerwyck was completed.

At that point a unique opportunity knocked at R. P. I.'s door and was told to come in. Here was something new: a community composed entirely of engineers. Could scientists govern themselves? They would be given a chance to try.

The residents of "the Wyck" met and wrote a constitution for their community. The compromise was a cross between the orthodox assembly system and the New England town meeting. Voting districts were determined, representatives elected. All residents over 16 vote on important issues.

By now the new community even has its own newspaper, the weekly Renwyck News. One of its prominent features, "Pink and Blue," reports an average of four new stork-propelled arrivals a week. The Wyck's next construction project will probably be a nursery.

Perhaps this unique combination of scientific, human, academic and domestic education will give the technicians of the future that improbable perfection which their atomic gift to the world makes essential. If so—R. P. I. might well invite politicians on special scholarships.

Democrats Have Senate Recapture All Figured

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

SENATE Democrats have already launched a campaign to recapture control of at least one branch of Congress in 1948.

To win the Senate, they need to pick up only four seats. Now it happens the statistical odds are with Senate Democrats. Only four of them, outside the solid South, are up for reelection. In contrast, Senate Republicans have 18 hostages to fortune.

First step in the Democratic campaign is to clinch the seats they now hold. They became jittery when Colorado's Ed Johnson, whose reelection they believed certain, announced he would retire at the end of his term.

The heat's now on Johnson to run again.

Only other Democratic Senators, outside the certain South, who must run the 1948 gantlet are New Mexico's Carl Hatch, Rhode Island's Theodore Green and Montana's James E. Murray.

Hatch and Green are virtual fixtures, but Republicans are after Murray's scalp.

Democrats hope to pick up four seats needed for Senate control from this list of six Republicans:

E. H. Moore of Oklahoma, Chapman Revercomb of West Virginia; John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky, C. Douglas Buck of Delaware, Edward V. Robertson of Wyoming and C. Wayland Brooks of Illinois.

AS PRESIDING officer of the Senate, Michigan's Arthur H. Vandenberg is teaching the "world's most deliberative body" some short cuts.

Last week Vandenberg swooshed the Senate into executive session, confirmed 26 nominations, then swished it back onto legislative business in 10 seconds flat.

Armed Services Chairman Chan Gurney had been trying all day to confirm 26 midshipmen so they could graduate last night with their class. The Senate can't act on nominations without holding an executive session. The labor bill was up. Every time Gurney moved an executive session somebody blocked it.

Finally Vandenberg, in the chair, took over. Without drawing a breath, he posed a whole series of unanimous consent requests, and announced their adoption.

It ran like this: "Is there objection? The chair hears none. Without objection the nominations are confirmed."

Between syllables, the Senate went into executive session, made all the middies happy, then snapped back to work on the labor bill.

TRUSTING Representative Francis Case (R., S. Dak.) recently told Republican colleagues President Truman had agreed to visit his South Dakota Black Hills country.

Skeptical colleagues wanted to know when. Case, author of the original labor bill Truman vetoed last session, said the President couldn't make it this year. Case proudly added:

SENATOR JOHNSON
. . . Beseeched

SENATOR MURRAY
. . . Besieged

"But he's agreed to come in 1948."

None reminded Case he'd virtually invited a political foe to enter his district in a campaign year.

SPEAKER JOE MARTIN confided the other day that he never gets quite as much kick out of "Big Six" White House conferences as he got out of the old bouts with Roosevelt.

"We were both Bristol County boys, you know," said the Speaker. "And when two county boys fight . . ."

Martin was born and reared in Massachusetts' Bristol County. Franklin Roosevelt, on vacation from Groton, used to summer there with his Delano relatives.

Roosevelt attacked Martin pitilessly in every campaign but never failed to remind him in private he was just another "county boy."

They kept up their private banter until the end. As House Republican Leader, Martin had to meet Roosevelt in the lobby and walk with the Roosevelt escort to the floor.

Before one message to Congress, he called Martin to his chair.

"Joe," he said, "I've laid a trap for your boys today. You better warn them not to cheer in the wrong places."

"It's a worthy foe who warns an adversary," replied Joe.

When the speech ended, and Martin was escorting him out, the late President chuckled:

"Well, I caught them, just as I said I would. They cheered in the wrong spots."

"You didn't catch me, replied Martin. "I didn't cheer at all."

It happened this way:

During the Nation-wide telephone strike, Teague received a wire criticizing his vote for the labor bill. It was signed by a telephone official in Bryan, Tex.

Teague dutifully wired back, explaining his vote. Apologized Teague:

"I am so sorry I could not reach you by telephone."

Matter of Vowels

MEMBERS of the Ohio congressional delegation, who have John Bricker's word he is bowing out of the next presidential race, received a shock the other day.

A letter under the letterhead of the Veterans Committee Against Communism, John W. Galbraith, chairman, urged them to support Bricker for President in 1948 because of his anti-Red record.

Now, in Ohio it is well known that one John Galbreath, Columbus real estate operator and part owner of the Pittsburgh Pirates, is Bricker's political "angel." Galbreath helped launch Bricker in politics and still is his staunchest friend.

If Galbreath was privately campaigning for Bricker it meant only one thing—that Bricker didn't mean what he said when he told Bob Taft it was his turn.

At least one of the startled Ohio House members called Bricker and complained. Was he, or was he not, running sub rosa?

Bricker had to explain that Galbraith and Galbreath are two different people. He didn't know Galbraith. He did know Galbreath. And Galbreath wasn't hooked up with any Veterans for Bricker group, or hush-hush campaign.

63 Nations Signed

THESE are a few random examples of work now being done by the World Health Organization, which is still in its preparatory stage. Sixty-three nations have signed the WHO constitution since it was drafted last July. This document has been called a Magna Carta of public health.

When 26 members of the United Nations have ratified the constitution—nine members and three nonmembers have already done so—the WHO will come into being as a specialized agency of the United Nations. But disease will not wait, and important emergency work is being done right now

During this period the WHO is governed by an interim commission of 18 member nations. International headquarters are in New York, and a technical office is maintained in Geneva. Dr. Andrija Stampar of Yugoslavia is commission chairman and Dr. Brock Chisholm of Canada is executive secretary.

The United States is represented on the interim commission by Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the Public Health Service.

The World Health Organizaton cannot do a large field job, but it can give technical advice and help the various nations get their own public health programs under way.

Advance Training

INCLUDED in the field activities is a fellowship program under which some 200 doctors, nurses, sanitary engineers, advanced specialists and graduate students of many countries will study advances in medical and public health knowledge for application in their homelands.

The fellowships range from the latest methods of installing and operating a water works to highly specialized research in bacteriology.

The use of committeees of internationally famous experts in special fields is another WHO method. Several Washingtonians shared in the work of the first expert committee, which met at Ottawa recently to revise the uniform list of death causes.

These nomenclature lists are important in helping doctors throughout the world to classify diseases and chart their trends. Those who worked in Ottawa included Dr. H. L. Dunn, Dr. I. M. Moriyama, Capt. Robert L. Ware, Eugene L. Hamilton and Steve Remias, all of Washington; and Drs. S. D. Collins and H. F. Dorn of Bethesda.

Few people realize that there are international sanitary conventions governing the pilgrimage to Mecca. With thousands of people every year coming from Europe, and the Near and Far East, their health problems become of international concern. A WHO committee recently made a field investigation of the Suez area and Red Sea ports, checking on quarantine measures with a view to recommending changes in the international conventions.

With malaria taking a death toll of more than two millions annually and making countless millions ill, a committee including some of the world's most famous malariologists has met, and data is being brought together on treatment and control methods.

Truman Behind It

AT a recent meeting in Geneva the interim commission established a series of priorities for the guidance of the committees and of the secretariat. The seven problems given top urgency were venereal disease, influenza, infant mortality, malaria, tuberculosis and work in biological standardization and international pharmacopoeia.

The United States Congress has before it a recommendation from President Truman that the WHO constitution be ratified. Ratification also was high on the list of foreign affairs priorities submitted to Congress by Secretary of State Marshall.

'Benelux' Still in Infancy

Low Countries Welding A Business Partnership

By Ed. L. Campbell

LONDON, June 7 (AP).—Eighteen million western Europeans, good neighbors for many years, are trying to show the world they can do even better for themselves as business partners.

They are the citizens of Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

While bigger nations wrangle and tussle, these little countries are shaping an economic union which shrewd observers say may well be a new world force.

"Benelux" is the handy name tagged to the combine. More formally it is the Belgian-Netherlands-Luxembourg Economic and Customs Union.

Its aim is to lift foreign trade of the three nations to a level none could reach separately and to lower their production costs. It steers clear of political and cultural entanglements. Started during the war in London by the three nations' governments-in-exile, the union may not be completed for five or six more years.

'Union' at Geneva

THE union is planned in three steps.

First is the establishment of a uniform tariff. This has been mapped fairly completely. Subject to approval by the respective Parliaments before July 1, it will become effective September 1.

Second will be establishment of uniform excise and sales taxes. That will be more difficult, but leaders are optimistic.

Third and biggest will be conclusion of full economic and monetary union. This is not expected before 1952. But even with the first step incomplete, the three countries anticipated the final move by sending a single common delegation to the Geneva World Trade Conference this spring.

There its leader, Max Suetens, Belgian director of foreign trade, was elected president of the conference. Both British and Americans welcomed it.

The United States already has started tariff negotiations with the Benelux combine and one American source said any agreements reached would supersede present treaties.

1922 Precedent

BELGIUM and Luxembourg have had an economic union since 1922, so the present negotiations are actually only two-sided.

Tough sledding has been encountered on the question of uniform sales and excise taxes. Currencies of the nations have different values. Dutch wage and price levels are lower than the Belgian. Internal trade taxes are calculated on different bases. Changes will have to be made cautiously to avoid upsetting domestic economy.

The final stage, with perhaps a common currency and a surrender of some sovereignty, will be the most interesting phase. Here the united desires of the peoples will be called upon to override special objections from pressure groups.

Belgian industrialists are keen to see the union carried through, with strongest support coming from heavy industry. Some medium and light manufacturers have expressed fear Holland would take advantage of the union to increase its low industrial potential, and Belgium would awake to find the Dutch "dumping" in Belgian trade areas.

Belgian farmers fear low cost Dutch agriculture, especially in dairy products.

Ports a Problem

ONE major problem has not really been tackled. That is the question of ports. Belgium's Foreign Trade Minister Francois Vanderstraeten-Waillet points out that "in 1938 the maritime traffic of Antwerp, Ghent, Rotterdam and Amsterdam reached 65 million tons, more than London and New York put together. Nowhere else in the world is there a similar port concentration. One of the main aims of the closer relations between Belgium and Holland will be to harmonize, fairly and totally, the activities of these ports."

Holland has agreed, as a step toward this end, to raise harbor tariffs materially. But the Dutch have shown no willingness to distribute traffic between the two countries. They cling to free and open competition.

It's Tomahawks Versus GOP Ax

CONGRESS' economy drive stirred up an unexpected protest last week.

In the center of the storm—though not too certain what it was all about—were some 56,000 men, women and children best known to Easterners through their blankets: The Navajo Indians.

The issue was the House Appropriations Committee cut in funds for the Indian Office. The major spokesmen for the Navajos was the New Mexico Association on Indian Affairs.

It pointed out that 40,000 of the Navajos cannot speak English and that there are 21,000 of school age and school facilities for only 5500. The cuts, it said, would add another 1000 children to the 15,500 who are without schools.

The association reported that 3600 Navajo braves served with the armed forces and 15,000 were in war work.

One Million Americans Are Normal—and Dull

By Alton L. Blakeslee

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP).—Only about 1 million Americans are mentally normal—free from anxieties, fears or weaknesses—but they are dull, uninteresting and don't seem human, says Dr. Earl D. Bond, prominent Philadelphia psychiatrist.

Some 133,000, he adds, go about their daily business with "unnecessary handicaps of nervousness"—fears, prejudices, overconscientiousness, over-sensitiveness, or feelings of inferiority.

In this group are concentrated talents, leadership, and conscience, he said, while many brilliant men and women are found in a group of about 2,500,000 out-and-out neurotics.

Unhuman Extremes

DR. BOND, professor of psychiatry, University of Pennsylvania, and research director of the Institute of Mental Hygiene, Philadelphia, classified the types of mental illness, and their possible effects on life expectancy, in a speech to the medical section of the American Life Convention.

"The million at the top of the line—the perfect ones—have no anxiety, no fears, no prejudices, no attractive vices no weaknesses," he said. "But like the few completely demented people at the other end of the line, they are not interesting. They don't seem human.

"This group would make good life insurance risks, but there are not enough of them to make much difference. They would all be perfect, well rounded and equal, like a string of zeros.

"The best people are not so different from people with delusions as they think they are; they are pulled by the same great emotions and instincts. What is learned from one group has an application to all groups.

"Patients with mental disease are much more honest and outspoken about their feelings and ideas than are more normal people. They give us an insight with the working of normal minds that we get nowhere else."

Slow Suicides

DR. BOND said it was by no means clear how much nervous symptoms decrease life expectancy, but suggested that insurance medical directors take interest in compiling records including emotional factors creating or modifying physical disease.

There are about one million mental cases who are or should be hospitalized, Dr. Bond continued. Some are incurable, some can be returned to full normal life. A large group suffers from depression, but these can be cured and many become brilliant leaders. Generally, he added, there is less physical illness among persons acutely ill mentally than among the general population.

Next Dr. Bond lists a half million chronic alcoholics, many of whom choose a slow method of suicide in trying to escape disagreeable realities.

Next he lists 2,500,000 people with severe neuroses. With them, "most of the mind goes about its normal business, often with extraordinary abilities and brilliant results, but one mental sector is completely illogical: the neurotic makes decisions in the present because of events of the past which have no logical connection whatever."

In this group are four general subdivisions. About half have anxiety neuroses, and in these, he said, there seems a tendency to lessen duration of life. Anxiety may be a large factor in causing peptic ulcers, Dr. Bond explained.

Secondly are the chronic invalids "who live long." They protect themselves by retiring from life, often to a bed existence.

Third, he continued, are the mysterics who develop a paralysis or pain of some kind, or memory loss, as a protective mechanism, but "there is no reason for life to be shortened."

Lastly is the compulsive or obsessive neurotic who "can live long and unhappily" spending time avoiding germs, subways, or sidewalk cracks, or in rituals such as constantly washing the hands.

Editorials Flare in His Wake

Wallace Burning Up Grass Roots

HENRY AGARD WALLACE, whose voluble swing around the country will bring him to the Water Gate here June 16, has produced a crop of grass roots editorial opinion as lush as his own hybrid corn. To labor the analogy, however, most of the comment has been more in the nature of weeds between the furrows.

Wallace has always been a dull-day life saver to the Washington-based columnists, of course, but never before have the way station pundits given him such a workout as when he stopped in their bailiwicks on this anti-Truman Doctrine tour.

The kindest word for Wallace came from the extreme East. Roscoe Drummond, chief of the Washington bureau of the Christian Science Monitor, whose home base is Boston, felt that there were some good reasons why Wallace drew larger crowds through the turnstiles than many presidential candidates have pulled through open doors.

One reason, said Drummond, was that "there have been very few well-balanced, understanding, highly regarded voices of criticism raised against the Truman Doctrine, and therefore Mr. Wallace has preempted nearly the whole field of criticism when criticism is genuinely needed." Drummond added, however: "The prevailing political judgment is that Wallace could not elect himself or any candidate of his choosing," but "could defeat Mr. Truman by starting a third party."

'College Boy' Brand

ANOTHER Eastern opinion, however, that of Victor Riesel in the New York Post, was that Wallace is just another young man "working his way through the United States selling magazines." Riesel couldn't see Wallace as even a remote political threat: "That lone political ranger couldn't rally anybody but the left wingers to get an election petition signed unless he paid so much per hundred."

Also in the East, the Alsops thought that the crowds which paid to hear Wallace had the same general character as those who buy tickets to see the two-headed calf. And the Baltimore Sun, reflecting that it once believed in Wallace's good intentions, decided that he has messianic delusions. It regretfully commented that "good intentions, when they are so heavily qualified by the itch for applause of the unthinking, can do a lot of harm."

The criticism swelled geographically as Wallace rolled westward. The St. Louis Post Dispatch, noting that Harold Stassen had forecast a Truman-Wallace ticket in '48, took issue. "Our achy bones tell us," it said, "that if the donkey's standard bearers in 1948 are Truman and Wallace, it will either be some other Truman than Harry or some other Wallace than Henry."

Speaking in the light of the Communist coup in Hungary, the St. Paul Pioneer Press noted Wallace's insistence that we "try to understand the Russians." "Perhaps, the editorial commented, "it would be better for his program of appeasement if he were saying just the opposite. The more the Russians are understood the more they look like their predecessors in the aggressor and imperialistic business."

The Denver Post gave Wallace much of its front page, printed the text of his speech and allowed him a guest column in which to denounce Publisher Palmer Hoyt. Then editorially it panned the former Vice President for being unaware of "the threat to fundamental liberties in totalitarian aggression."

The Portland Oregonian questioned Wallace's honesty and sincerity. It said his Portland speech "descended to a new low in demagogy among those who have held high office or have sought high office in a tolerant democracy."

DENVER SANDWICH

'An Incredible Fellow'

BUT it was Edwin A. Lahey of the Chicago Daily News who wrote the most trenchant description of his fellow Midwesterner. Lahey, traveling with Wallace, first warned from Seattle that the 100,000 persons who had heard Wallace up to that point could not be dismissed as "the disciplined Left Wing rabble, nor as curiosity seekers." And when the entourage reached San Francisco, Lahey wrote in part:

"Traveling with Henry Wallace takes an awful lot out of a man . . . There is no limit to his bounce. The other evening, after a particularly hard day, one of the troupe asked Henry if he weren't tired. Not satisfied with mere words, Henry had to show by deeds that he wasn't tired. He plopped down on the hotel room floor and did 25 pushups without letting his stomach touch the rug.

"Henry is an incredible fellow, with an insatiable appetite for lofty discussion and virtually no sense of humor. I went walking with him here in San Francisco the other day and was on the verge of a collapse after six blocks. He takes quick, short steps, and to keep up with him I am always on the edge of a dog trot.

"On this block he will explain to you the changing effect of cosmic rays in the different latitudes of the globe. On the next block he will explain the history and background of a particular kind of grass in a little park. A few minutes later he will be recalling the case of several lawyers who tried to trim a poor lady in Iowa many years ago and how they all met violent deaths within a year.

"'The judgment of God,' Henry says grimly.

"I still can't make up my mind what the guy has that puts hysteria into the soul of his audiences. But when he comes out on the platform with that bucolic look of innocence on his puss, they all go slightly daffy. And they all pay to get into the hall. Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., who is a V. I. P. in any language, was pulling strings all day in Los Angeles just to get a pasteboard into the stadium with 27,000 other people."

Greek Appointment

Several times we have sympathized with the President over his difficulties in getting the right man for the right job for the administrative tasks we have assumed abroad. The obvious choice to head up Greek reconstruction, of course, was Mark Ethridge, who, from all accounts, has done a superb job as American representative on the Greek Border Commission, amid difficulties that would have daunted a man of less zeal and sincerity. But tentative soundings on Capitol Hill showed he was unacceptable to certain Senators with whom in the past he had tilted through his newspaper. Other able men refused to make a sacrifice which might one day land them in a pillory before a congressional committee. So the President has named a man, and a Republican at that, in Dwight Griswold, three times Governor of Nebraska, who appears to be removed from controversy. At the same time Mr. Griswold is a proven administrator abroad as well as at home, being a member of General Clay's "cabinet" in Berlin.

In the circumstances the President is fortunate in getting the services of a man of Mr. Griswold's caliber. Yet we cannot withhold regret that the President had to go down the line for an appointment which should have been manned by somebody with a name of symbolic value. This appointee should be known abroad as well as here as a man of devotion to free institutions; a man, for instance, like Robert M. La Follette or Spruille Braden. However, the circumstances of our public life make the President's task of selection so arduous that we feel sure he has done the best he could. It is to be hoped Mr. Griswold is equipped with a good organization for his crucial task, for he deserves maximum support for an assignment that is going to be inordinately difficult.

Unions And Politics

Not only is the existing prohibition against political contributions by labor unions inadequate, but all restrictions on use of union funds for political purposes will be lifted when the Smith-Connally Act expires June 30 unless the labor bill which will go to the White House tomorrow becomes law. Under this bill labor organizations would be prohibited from making any contribution or expenditures in connection with national elections or primaries. All the proposed legislation aims at doing is to put labor organizations under restrictions already applicable to corporations and to close loopholes in the existing law that have permitted certain types of political expenditure to escape the ban, such as outlays for political advertisements and pamphlets designed to influence the outcome of elections.

Opponents of the proposal protest that it would muzzle the labor unions and deprive the labor press of the right to express its opinions freely. The same argument, of course, can be applied against the banning of political publications financed by business and industrial corporations. But in neither case can it rightly be claimed that the freedom of the press would be invaded or the rights of an individual to express his opinions curtailed. The members of a labor union would still be perfectly free to make voluntary contributions for the support of a newspaper or other publication designed to further the political fortunes of particular candidates or parties. According to Senator Taft, a labor union could, indeed, under the proposed law publish a political newspaper provided it was paid for by subscriptions. But no union funds could be used for the purpose.

In our opinion, such restrictions are necessary not only to protect the body politic against the sort of spending abuses that the Corrupt Practices Act was intended to prevent, but also to protect members of labor unions from being forced to make indirect contributions for political purposes. Far from being an invasion of the right of an individual to give free expression to his political views, prohibitions on the political use of union funds are essential to protect those rights. For members of labor unions belong to different parties and their political views often represent the extremes of radicalism and conservatism. They are banded together to further their mutual economic interests—not to advance the fortunes of any political party or candidate for office. Hence, if any part of the contributed dues are used for political purposes some of the contributors are in effect victims of political coercion, being denied their right as citizens to throw their support wholeheartedly to causes and candidates of their own choice.

Under existing law labor unions become the accredited bargaining representatives of employes. Sometimes those employes are forced to become members of a union in order to hold their jobs. In any case, they may wish to join the organization that represents them and determines the conditions of their employment. If that organization uses any part of the dues they contribute to support political programs or candidates for political office not acceptable to them, they are placed in a most embarrassing position. Many union members would, therefore, welcome a complete legal divorce between labor organizations and any form of political activity as a means of emancipating them from forced contributions to political causes of which they disapprove.

Local Tax Boost

The most striking fact about the District tax program outlined by Representative Bates and Senator Cain, and now approved by the House District Committee, is its inadequacy, in spite of the drastic boost in real estate taxes, to meet the city's revenue needs. Mr. Bates' bill is designed to raise an additional $14,060,000 next year. Even this increase, however, would not stretch over the gap between the sum of revenue anticipated under present law and the estimate of necessary expenditures. Mr. Bates proposes to slash $2,500,000 from the District budget to bring it within the outmost bounds to which the revenue total can be pushed. But Congressman Horan, chairman of the committee which is fixing the District's spending pattern for the next year, thinks that appropriations may have to be expanded by six million dollars instead of being cut by nearly half that sum.

We suspect that Mr. Horan is much nearer to the realities of the local problem than is Mr. Bates. Washington has experienced mushroom growth in a period when its municipal facilities could not be expanded because of the war. Now it is imperative to provide new schools, hospital buildings, clinics, welfare institutions, bridges, streets, water works, and so forth. The difficulty lies not so much in failure of the Bates-Cain group to face the taxing problem as in the impossibility of raising taxes enough to cover the city's present emergency requirements. Only a Federal loan to the District, we think, can bridge the present gap between income and necessary outgo without imposing an utterly unreasonable burden upon local taxpayers.

There are a number of strong points in the proposed tax program. Certainly the income tax provisions intended to catch actual residents of Washington who now pay no local income tax because they claim a legal domicile elsewhere are a reform long overdue. We think the proposed 1-cent increase in the gasoline tax is also justified as a means of continuing essential highway improvements. No doubt the water rates also have to be raised, although a raise less drastic than 25 per cent and a loan to help finance new water works would be preferable, in our opinion. There is also good reason for increasing the Federal payment to the District by four million dollars. It is a pity that the joint committee could not agree upon a formula that would effect adjustments in the Federal payment from year to year in accord with the admitted Federal obligation to help pay the cost of services from which it so extensively benefits.

The one critically vulnerable point in the revenue program is the proposed hike in the real estate tax rate from $1.75 to $2 per hundred dollars of assessed valuation. The Commissioners have already increased assessments by a flat 20 per cent for home owners. The higher rate would thus mean a double jump in property taxes, which would certainly result in higher rents. Considering the fact that a disproportionate share of our total revenue is already coming from real estate, despite the exemption of more than half the land area of the District from real estate taxes, this proposal seems particularly indefensible. It would amount to a special sales tax on living accommodations, without any of the virtues of a general sales tax, as applied in this city of transients.

We hope that Congress will reject this item and accept the remainder of the tax program. A sales tax might be reasonably substituted for the proposed increase in the real estate tax rate, but if Congress is unwilling to meet its responsibility in this way, the only alternative we see is a loan to the District to finance its urgent public improvements. Indeed, it appears that a loan will have to be forthcoming anyway, and that makes a double boost in taxes from renters and home owners alike the more indefensible.

Time Studies

For more than 30 years the War and Navy Departments have been forbidden by law to make job time-studies or use any part of their appropriations to pay production bonuses. This week, however, the House passed the War Department appropriation bill without these restrictive provisions after Representative Forand had vainly tried to restore them.

Removal of the ban on time studies and on production bonuses would add to the efficiency of Government plants, heretofore greatly hampered, as Secretary of the Navy Patterson says, because of "the lack of this essential engineering tool." One expert estimates that the War Department alone could save half a billion dollars in payroll, material and equipment on a five-billion-dollar outlay by removal of the ban. And additional substantial savings would follow, for if the War Department is given the "green light," other Government agencies will undoubtedly be permitted to follow through.

It is not surprising that the public has come to regard Government-owned business as synonymous with waste and inefficiency, when our legislators put so many obstacles in the way of efficient performance. In this particular instance Congress has for more than 30 years prevented the introduction of legitimate devices to prevent malingering and speed up production, because of the deep prejudice created by the so-called Taylor system. Representative Forand repeated those old arguments, oblivious to the fact that times have changed. The War and Navy Department heads are eager to change with the times and increase efficiency by following the example of up-to-date private businesses.

Cooked Goose

Apt testimony by Chairman James M. Landis of the Civil Aeronautics Board as to the feebleness of British and Russian airline competition should make short shrift of the chosen instrument bill before Congress. Mr. Landis showed up the threat of foreign competition for what it is—a straw man erected by those who for their own peculiar reasons want to lump all American overseas air operations into a monopoly. Not only does British and Russian competition not present a danger, but if American companies keep reasonably abreast of the times there is little prospect of the threat developing. According to Mr. Landis, the British have no new planes yet in commercial production, and they are not purchasing more American models. Thus the real danger is not in competition, but in the possibility of their asking restrictions on American traffic because of their inability to compete. As for the lagging Russian position, Mr. Landis sums up his remarks with the statement: "I have yet to see any facts or figures which prove either that the Russians are capable of competing with us in civil aviation today, or that they will be capable of outflying us on the commercial air lanes in the foreseeable future."

Senate and House committees now have concluded their hearings on the chosen instrument. In view of the flimsiness of the case, as well as the outlook for improved revenues on the part of American flag carriers, we hope this ends once and for all the consideration exacted by the indefatigable proponents of monopoly. The most disturbing thing about the whole farcical procedure is the totally inordinate amount of time and money necessary to discredit this perennial source of vexation.

Religion in the Schools

The case involving religious instruction in the public schools of Champaign, Ill., which the Supreme Court has consented to review, presents an issue of most profound public importance. Religion in the classrooms of Champaign is not an isolated phenomenon. It has been introduced into public schools elsewhere by well-intentioned clergymen and school boards—in some of the public schools of Arlington, for example, to offer an illustration close to home. The development has exceedingly dangerous implications in our judgment, despite its apparent beneficence and teh manifest good will of its sponsors.

In Champaign, the religious classes are sponsored by the nonsectarian Council of Religious Education on which Jewish, Catholic and Protestant faiths are represented. Participation by the pupils is voluntary, requiring the written consent of their parents. But one parent, Mrs. Vashti McCollum, wife of a University of Illinois professor, who describes herself as a "rationalist or atheist," has protested that the arrangement is embarrassing to children whose parents do not wish them to participate and accordingly she has brought a suit testing its constitutional validity.

Without attempting at this stage to evaluate the constitutional issues involved, we say without hesitation that we consider the arrangement contrary to sound public policy. The voluntary nature of the religious classes becomes an illusion in view of the powerful social pressure which children may exert upon a nonconformist. And if religious freedom has any meaning at all, it must mean freedom from compulsion to conform. It matters very little that Mrs. McCollum's attitude is a singular one. Tolerance of such an attitude is the real test of liberty.

Long experience has demonstrated that a resolute separation of church and state is an indispensable foundation of both religious and political freedom. For this reason, such a separation was made a cardinal principle of the American society. We think it undeniable that the introduction of religious teaching into public school classrooms, however desirable the teaching may be in itself, and however much it may be desired by a majority or even by all of the pupils and their parents, breaches this principle. Religion is of the spirit; education deals with the mind. Neither can be advanced by intermingling. Each can flourish best in its own separate sphere.

THESE FLOWERS—

For as long as I can remember,
The windows in our old farm home
Have been alive with color and cheer.
There are geraniums and begonias,
Ivy and climbing vines, and a spreading
Christmas cactus that opens its lovely
Pink blooms at least once a year.
One almost felt these plants and vines
Had grown to know the loving touch of one
Who placed them where the warm sunlight
Could come so freely in. Mother loved
Her flowers, but she has gone.
And yet, by now, they must have grown
To know the tender touch of younger hands,
Those of a girl with deep blue eyes
That twinkle and smile like those
Of the kind old woman whose heart held warmth
And love for every tree and flower.

"Universal Training"

Your editorial on June 3, "Universal Training," stated that "the recommendation (i. e., in favor of compulsory military training) does not come from military men but from a group of educators and businessmen of national eminence who have considered the whole problem of our security on a broad level."

This is but a half truth. True, they are not military men, but there is evidence that each was hand-picked because his thinking is known to be in line with that of the War Department.

The executive secretary of the commission will undoubtedly reflect the point of view of the War Department, for he is John Okly, the special assistant to the Secretary of War.

The chairman, Dr. Karl T. Compton, spoke in favor of compulsory peacetime training at a luncheon April 20, 1945, in New York City.

Another member, Dr. Daniel Poling, editor of the Christian Herald, according to the Philadelphia Record of April 11, 1945, said that, "Universal training is necessary to insure democracy against physical deterioration."

Charles E. Wilson, president of the General Electric Co., indicated his commitment to the War Department philosophy and program early in 1944 and later said that we must begin now to set the machinery in motion for peacetime military training.

Samuel I. Rosenman, friend of President Roosevelt, is reported to have written many of his speeches at the time he was speaking for peacetime conscription.

Truman K. Gibson, a Negro, is a former aid to the Secretary of War and is not a representative of such important organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Brotherhood of Pullman Porters or Fraternal Council of Negro Churches.

The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, unlike the president of Georgetown University or the Roman Catholic bishops, is known to be sympathetic to the War Department point of view, having taught Army officers during the war.

Mrs. Anna Rosenberg is widely known as one who consistently followed President Roosevelt's thinking on such matters as foreign policy and conscription.

Harold W. Dodds, president of Princeton, does not oppose peacetime conscription, as stated in the Christian Century January 1, 1947.

Joseph E. Davies, close friend of President Roosevelt, is the only one of the commission whose attitude on universal military training is not known.

I feel that the people must be told of the real nature of the presidential commission. I place no confidence in its recommendations.

Italian Colonies

As one who was with the British Eighth Army in North Africa, Sicily and Italy, I have an obligation to comment on the asinine column of June 4 by Mr. Sumner Welles entitled "Italian Colonies."

He writes that there is no moral justification for depriving the Italian people of Libya. Of course, they only started a war causing intense and widespread suffering, the loss of millions of lives, and the destruction of enormous quantities of material wealth. Are they to escape the consequences of their folly and be encouraged to try again sometime?

He writes that we need not be bound by the British promise of independence to the Senussis unless we regard such a commitment as expedient and desirable. Are we not morally obligated to a people who saved American lives by fighting with us rather than against us?

He writes that the Senussis are entitled to their independence as soon as they demonstrate their capacity to assume the obligations involved. From my knowledge of both the Italians and the Senussis, I can guarantee that the latter are far better qualified to rule themselves.

Finally, he writes that awarding Libya to Italy would do much to counteract the legitimate resentment which the Italian people feel because of the terms of the Italian peace treaty. What right have they to resentment when they are lucky to be alive?

Labor Bill Veto

The ordinary "man in the street" cannot understand why Mr. Marquis Childs, supposed to be a "liberal democrat," should favor the autocrats of labor, with serfdom for the rank and file. In short, he would have the President veto the bill planned to correct the abuses arising from the exercise of power which the labor bosses have displayed—often to the injury of the general public, whose rights they feel under no obligation to respect.

Presumably Mr. Childs, like the writer, was opposed to the once-uncontrolled monopolists of money, but now he opposes, with singular inconsistency, the laborers' bill of rights which, by promoting democracy in these unions, would put some limits on the power of labor bosses as the manipulators of men!

Internal Discord

The President's Advisory Commission, through Dr. Karl T. Compton, has just advised the President that "our military forces are a hollow shell."

Congress has just appropriated something like 10 billions of dollars for the Army and Navy. Why then do we have only a "hollow shell"? What is the use of pouring out billions of dollars if we never have anything to show for it? We had poured out billions for the ten years preceding Pearl Harbor.

All this lends emphasis to the fact that you cannot temporize with internal lawlessness, governmental coddling of the people of the Nation and a total let down in national discipline and then have a strong Nation, by merely appropriating dollars.

We read that Congress has retreated upon the House provision to prohibit mass picketing and violence in picketing (the prime agencies of terrorism in labor disputes) because of fear of a presidential veto if those provisions are not eliminated, and in the same paper we read that the Allis-Chalmers strike was Communist-engineered and that more than 2000 phony ballots called the strike against the wishes of the men forced to strike. That strike continued many, many months and cost the United States vitally needed machinery. We also read that the Briggs auto body plant is to be tied up by a strike, that the Ford foremen will continue their strike and that Mr. John Lewis may again tie up the Nation's coal supply.

Why need Russia seek the atomic bomb when all she has to do is to sit tight, force her disciplined masses to work and produce, and watch this great America destroy itself from within because of the failure of its people to insist upon law and order and reasonable discipline, ahead of all other considerations?

Separate Peace

Former President Hoover has proposed a separate peace by the democracies with western Germany and Japan, independently of Russia if Russia will not join. Mr. Lippmann comments that that would be tantamount to still holding Germany and Japan defenseless while defending both against neighbors—meaning Russia—with whom they would technically still remain at war.

Yes, it would be costly, no doubt. But we have no choice. For, given our huge, new public debt, we must now not only reconstruct but expand the economic world in order that we can, ourselves, earn an expanded national income with which to support our debt and not collapse under it into national bankruptcy.

Moreover, we cannot expect cooperation in world reconstruction from Soviet Russia. Just the contrary. We must expect Soviet Russia to sabotage and block such reconstruction wherever possible, thereby wrecking the democracies and opening the way to world dictatorship by the Kremlin.

For the sake of its own self-preservation, that Kremlin gang cannot allow the democracies, which can spell its doom, to recover. It must destroy them if it can. It need not attack them physically to do that. It need only prevent their recovery from where they have been most weakened by the last war, namely in their economies; prevent their recovery and let them disintegrate of themselves through exhaustion.

We have not realized it yet, but this is World War III. We are unaware, because it is not, and may never be, an old-style shooting war. The new weapons are not physical, tangible, but invisible economic and social tools, sapper tools, undermining tools. Yet that kind of war is more dangerous to our institutions than a shooting war.

First and foremost, we must support and rebuild the British and European economies without which no world reconstruction is possible. But, again, no European reconstruction is possible without the reconstruction of Germany, its most important producer and consumer. Given the increasing importance of the Far East to world economic expansion, no world expansion is possible without the reconstruction of industrial Japan. Yet we cannot very well both remain at war with Germany and Japan and reconstruct them, simultaneously.

First objective of a separate peace must be to restore German and Japanese production and exports in order that both countries can again earn their indispensable footstuff imports, stand on their own feet and not on the feet of democratic taxpayers. That is just what Soviet Russia would prevent and has so far prevented. For the longer these defeated nations are left defeated the more will they sap the economic strength of the democracies and hasten their collapse. Russia has so far contributed nothing to the recovery of Germany, of Austria, of Hungary, etc. As far as she can, she is fortifying herself with the lifeblood of others, is leaving to the democracies the more and more insuperable task of restoring lifeblood to the world.

It would seem, then, that President Hoover's proposal is merely a quiet recognition, at long last, of things as they are and as they have been ever since Potsdam, and of the only thing that can be done about it . . . Messrs. Wallace, Lippman et al notwithstanding.

Independence For Korea

A Communication

THE MOTIVE prompting your editorial of May 21, "Disservice To Korea," is not questioned, but this is not true of the information used as a basis for this editorial.

You say "any substantial move toward independence for Korea depends on agreement with Russia. It is unfortunate that Dr. Syngman Rhee and his rightist cohorts cannot bring themselves to accept this fact."

Dr. Rhee cannot accept your suggested fact. He has been fighting the battle for the freedom of Korea for more than 40 years and cannot dismiss lightly some facts of history. He knows that Korea was a point of contention between Russia and Japan in 1905. Japan won the war with Russia and Korea was annexed by Japan as a result of a secret agreement between this country and Japan.

(The following is from Editorial Research Reports, with permission to us to quote):

"One of the most remarkable examples of secret diplomacy in the history of the United States is to be found in a verbal agreement entered into with Japan during the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt. The negotiations were carried on by William Howard Taft, then serving as Secretary of War. The conversations carried on by Taft with the representative of the Japanese government, Count Katsura, established these points: Japan was content that the United States should establish and maintain a stable government in the Philippines; the United States, on its part, saw the justice of "the establishment of Japanese troops of a suzerainty over Korea'."

WE HAD ENTERED into a solemn treaty with Korea in 1882 providing that we would go to her aid if she were attacked. This treaty was violated by us. It has not to this day been abrogated.

Dr. Rhee is aware of the fact that the thirty-eighth parallel was established in the minds of Russia as far back as 1905 and that it was revived by them with our Government's consent through a secret agreement at Yalta.

Dr. Rhee cannot be unmindful of the fact that a democratic government was set up in 1919 after a secret national election had been held in Korea. Thirty-three delegates were elected and held a convention, issued their declaration of independence and organized the provisional government. The United States Government through the Department of State was beseeched to recognize the provisional government.

Dr. Rhee pointed out to the officials of the Department of State that if recognition was delayed until the war was over, Russia would attempt to set up a Communist government in northern Korea. His pleas were renewed after the Pearl Harbor attack and continued up to the time of his return to Korea.

Criticism of Dr. Rhee comes from one of three sources; ignorance, communism and the Department of State, and when they are brought to the front they usually arrive from the same hopper. We are embroiled in a mess with Russia which is traceable to the stupidity of officials of the State Department for its refusal to recognize the provisional government after repeated requests to do so.

THE CONTROL which Dr. Rhee has over his people has enabled him to prevent demonstrations time and time again. Dr. Rhee is a statesman, and has sufficient foresight to realize that any demostration by his followers would give the Communists an opportunity to create incidents such as attacking our soldiers which would result in loss of good will and prestige which the Koreans now enjoy in this country.

If the State Department would take the time to investigate these statements allegedly made by Dr. Rhee, they would find that most of them emanate from unreliable sources.

A newspaper reporter is reported to have issued a statement that Dr. Rhee had told him he had a secret agreement with the State Department about Korea. Anyone giving credence or believing this statement in my opinion would have to have a mentality below that of a moron. Yet someone in the State Department rushes into print to deny the alleged statement supposed to have been made by Dr. Rhee. The State Department is not content with the denial but attempts to put a false construction on the statement and charge an ulterior motive to Dr. Rhee. The State Department denial states:

"Rhee's statement, coming on the opening day of the renewed negotiations of the American-Soviet joint commission in Korea, disturbed officials here who fear that his major objective is to see the joint commission break down again."

This statement attributed to Dr. Rhee relative to a secret agreement has since been denied emphatically and officially by Dr. Rhee.

Controlling Speed

The highest automobile casualty rate in the world has not taught our motorists the value of caution and care in handling automobiles. The obvious answer is to control speed, which can be done mechanically by the automobile manufacturer.

State or Federal legislation would be necessary to require the automotive industry to limit the potential speed of the engines it manufactures, but I believe that is a possibility. An automobile driver would not mind the lack of speed if all other drivers were deprived of it and could go no faster than the person ahead of him. Cut speed to a reasonable rate of travel and you save hundreds of lives.

Lewis' Vengeful Chinese Puzzle

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

ONE of the most intricate political Chinese puzzles in years is involved in John L. Lewis' recent action in pulling the plug on the wage negotiations with the coal operators.

The parts of the puzzle are simple enough. For example, it is obvious that Lewis' action puts tremendous pressure on the President to sign the labor bill, which Lewis calls a "slave bill." The difficulty is to fit the parts of the puzzle together.

Lewis has now raised the specter of a coal strike next month. Only 10 days ago that specter was largely discounted at the White House. The coal negotiations had the appearance of proceeding more successfully than might have been expected, and a coal settlement was counted on. Moreover, Lewis had it in his power to continue this outward appearance of successful negotiation while the decision to sign or not to sign the Hartley-Taft bill was under consideration.

Lewis did not choose to do so. Instead, he demanded a 35-cent an hour raise, more than double the national pattern set by his rival, Philip Murray of the CIO, as well as other benefits. The negotiations collapsed. There can be little doubt that Lewis, for whatever reasons, wanted them to collapse.

Muttering Is Ominous

THERE is yet another part of the Chinese puzzle. All the evidence suggests that Lewis in fact does not want another coal strike. The three strikes during the past year have hit his men hard. Many of them still have large debts at the company stores. During the last strike particularly—the "holiday" after the Centralia disaster—there was considerable muttering in the ranks. Interior Department officials here have received messages from the mine workers' locals urging them to prevent a strike at all costs.

Naturally enough, since he has tripled wages since the thirties, for the miners the sun still rises and sets in John L. Lewis. Yet another prolonged strike would be a severe economic strain on the miners, and the muttering in the ranks might rise to a roar.

Yet Lewis chose the very week when the Taft-Hartley bill was edging toward the President's desk to raise the awful specter of another damaging strike in coal. He has thus presented the majority of the President's advisers, who are urging him to sign the bill, with their heaviest ammunition, why?

Revenge the Hard Way

A NUMBER of the most astute political observers here have been asking themselves that question. And they have all come up with the same peculiar answer: John L. Lewis wants Harry Truman to sign the labor bill.

One man who has had 25 years' experience in watching the national political circus arrived at this answer by means of what he calls a "Rube Goldberg process of reasoning." Yet it is the only answer which can be made to fit the facts.

The elephantine Lewis does not easily forget an injury. Since last autumn, when Harry Truman surprised the Nation by slicing Lewis down to size, Lewis is known to have detested Truman with the relentless fervor once reserved for Franklin Roosevelt.

Moreover Lewis, whatever else he is, is no fool. He is quite conscious of the threat to Truman's reelection involved in the increasingly likely emergence of Henry Wallace as the leader of a Communist-backed third party. And he knows that if Truman signs the labor bill the Wallace backers will be handed a big slice of labor support on a platter. Thus, if the fear of a coal strike can force Truman into signing the labor bill, he might well be signing his own political death warrant for 1948.

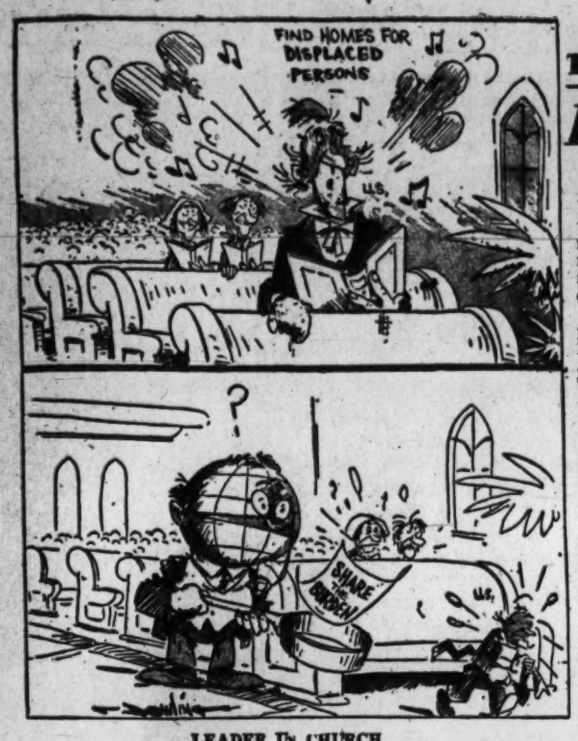
Undermining Murray

MOREOVER, if Truman signs the bill, the worries of Lewis' harassed enemy, Philip Murray, will be vastly augmented. Quite apart from whether the bill is a good bill or a bad bill, there is no question that it is sincerely hated and feared by organized labor. If Truman signs, the case of those leaders within the CIO who are fighting the Communists will be greatly weakened. The pressure within the CIO will be all in favor of the Communists.

The possibility which already exists of an explosion within the CIO on the Communist issue would be increased. The anti-Communist unions would join the AFL. Lewis' domination of the AFL is no secret, and he has no Communist worries within his own union. Thus Lewis might well end up as the leader of the whole non-Communist labor movement.

And he could probably rely on the conservative Republican Administration which a third-party movement would be likely to elect to take care of the splinter Communist group. In this connection it is interesting that Lewis has recently intensified his political and personal links with certain of the leading congressional Republicans.

If this is indeed the Lewis strategy—and no other reasonable explanation has been advanced—it is an astute one. For the timing is such that no risk to Lewis is involved. Even if Truman took the full ten days to make up his mind, Lewis would still have at least two weeks after the decision on the bill to negotiate a contract. Thus do the pieces of the Chinese puzzle fall neatly into place. And the pattern therein visible is not immensely pleasing.



LEADER IN CHURCH

. . . Dowling, in the New York Herald-Tribune

Leo Wolman

Labor's Frankenstein

THE rising tide of union protest against the proposed Federal labor bill shows how little organized labor has understood the Wagner Act and its probable consequences.

The Wagner Act is a regulatory measure. It regulates certain forms of conduct in labor relations. It started by regulating the behavior of employers. But, before it was long established, it began to regulate the conduct of labor unions also.

This is inevitable, and it is the history of much regulatory legislation that the area of regulation tends to expand. For unions to expect regulation to be limited to the conduct of employers is the same as expecting a government to control prices without controlling wages.

Congress is merely accelerating and formalizing a process that is already under way. There are numerous examples of the ways in which unions under the Wagner Act were surrendering their freedom of action. One of the most striking examples of this condition is encountered in determining the bargaining unit and the choice of the bargaining agency.

Congress Saved AFL Once

BEFORE the Wagner Act, union jurisdiction was exclusively a private matter. It is no longer so. In an early decision of the National Labor Relations Board, the AFL Longshoremen's Union was forced to surrender its bargaining rights in an area where it had long bargained. It is true that political pressure caused the board to change its decision. But the board's power to fix jurisdiction remained unimpaired because it derived that power from the Wagner Act.

Hundreds of independent unions were wiped out by the exercise of that power. It took special action by Congress to protect a group of AFL unions from losing more than 100,000 members in the Kaiser shipyards during the war as a result of an NLRB ruling. But what on that occasion the board was required to refrain from doing, it will in the future do.

Similar observations can be made about the closed shop, or the use of force in recruiting members, or the requirement that unions, as well as employers, are obligated to bargain. It is the Wagner Act which made the closed shop, in all of its manifold forms, subject to public scrutiny and regulation. In a recent decision the NLRB ruled that under certain types of closed shop agreement an employer could not be required to discharge employes who were working against the interests of the union of which they had been members.

Subject to Circumstances

THE NLRB likewise ruled not long ago that unions have to bargain else they are not in a position to charge employers with refusing to bargain. Of course, if there is no law the board may change its mind about a ruling of this kind. But the change cannot be permanent because the logic of the situation and public opinion will keep it from being so.

It seems equally certain that, even in the absence of a new law, the board would in time have taken steps to curb the use of force by unions. For even so mild a report as that submitted to the Governor of Massachusetts several months ago said: "The words 'intimidation,' 'threat' or 'coercion' should mean the same thing when applied to activities of a union as when applied to comparable activities by an employer."

Organized labor has been unwilling to see the handwriting on the wall. Regulation is the price it is bound to pay for the exceptional privileges it has obtained from the Wagner Act.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Back-Home Rumbles Jar Congress

By Drew Pearson

IT'S SUMMER in Washington and the air is heavy with politics. Congress chugs along faster as the humidity settles over the Potomac. Congressmen want to get home and do some pulse checking. Reports filtering in from across the Nation disturb them.

There's dissatisfaction about housing, foreign policy, taxes and school teachers' salaries. The PAC, which was considered stone cold dead half a year ago, has just won some impressive victories. Then there's Harold Stassen and Henry Wallace drawing crowds so big they have to call out police reserves to hold them back. No wonder Congress wants to get back home and see what all this means.

Minor Mysteries

WHY did the War Department install telephones in the washrooms of the new State Department Building? . . . What happened to Ohio Congressman Clarence Brown's threat to open each session of the Eightieth Congress "with a prayer and close with a probe?"

Price Portents

THE President's Council of Economic Advisers continues to be worried about the approaching economic storm. There are plenty of storm warnings, especially the slowdown on residential and nonresidential construction. President Truman seems to be keeping his fingers crossed, hoping things will come out all right.

The congressional slash of farm-support appropriations convinces the economic advisers that farmers face price trouble around harvest time.

The council's toughest opponent is Treasury Secretary Snyder, who opposes "too much planning." Its strongest White House advocate is Presidential General Counsel Clark Clifford, who believes a "stitch in time can save nine."

Anti-Dewey Strategy

QUIET but significant is the drive behind the scenes to block Governor Dewey at the next Republican Convention. The anti-Dewey coalition is almost unorganized and spontaneous, but it's growing.

The man doing most to cut into Dewey's chances is Minnesota's shrewd Harold Stassen, the only man with guts enough to campaign openly. The Stassen strategy is based on this: While he has no hope of buttoning up enough candidates to win on the first ballot himself, he feels that if he can deadlock the convention for several ballots, he has a chance to bring home the bacon.

Therefore, Stassen forces are concentrating on winning "second-choice" support. This has been done by quietly encouraging numerous "favorite-son" candidates.

Stassenites estimate that favorite son ballots will take close to 400 votes away from Dewey. The Taft forces, with control of Southern delegations, will have at least 250 first-ballot votes. This means, according to Stassen optimists, that Dewey will fall at least 100 votes short of the 547 needed on the first ballot.

Presidential hopefuls are convinced that if Dewey fails on the first ballot, his strength will drop consistently thereafter, leaving the field wide open. Right now, according to inside GOPsters, the following delegations will come to Philadelphia with favorite-son candidates:

California—Warren, 53 votes.
Ohio—Taft, 53 votes.
Indiana—Halleck, 29 votes.
Massachusetts—Saltonstall, 35 votes.
Pennsylvania—Martin, 73 votes.
Michigan—Vandenberg, 41 votes.
Illinois—Governor Green, 59 votes.
New York—Dewey, 97 votes.
Oregon—Morse, 15 votes.
Minnesota—Stassen, 25 votes.

The Taft forces informally claim 165 Southern votes, plus Nebraska's 15 and Ohio's 53, on the first ballot.

All this adds up to a red-hot siege of backstage finagling next fall and winter by Republican hopefuls, also to a red-hot Republican convention next summer.

Note—Stassen forces are out to do a "Willkie," will enter State primary fights—even in Ohio—hoping to show popular strength wherever possible. The odds, however, still favor Dewey.

The Diplomatic Pouch

FROM the uncensored diplomatic cables: The State Department hinted to Rome last week that if Premier Alcide de Gasperi would form a non-Communist government, Italy would get another 100-million-dollar Export-Import Bank loan. De Gasperi took the hint . . . Gen. John R. Hodge, American commander in Korea, has restored the wartime censorship on soldier and civilian mail to the United States.

State Department had ordered a crew of cultural experts into Cuba to combat the Russian penetration, but will have to pull them back if GOP congressional cuts go through . . . Russian propaganda is trying hard to win over Argentina. Posters proclaim: "Read the Truth—The USSR wants peace." . . . Argentina is preparing to stake out claims in the Antarctic for uranium.

Foreign Policy Is Now Definite

ALMOST three months have passed since President Truman sent to Congress the message that heralded a new foreign policy for the United States. The time intervening has been enough for a pattern to develop, for the parts to fall into place, so that by now it is possible to say what the new policy is.

The new policy is not widely grasped. For this there are obvious reasons. The first announcement of the policy was made in connection with a concrete step in it, the grant of 400 million dollars to Greece and Turkey. Because this step was definite as well as novel, it received public attention, obscuring the policy as a whole. And just because the new policy is so far-reaching, it is not readily taken in.

Some critics, grasping parts of the new policy, say it is fragmentary; vague. They see it as having a piecemeal, cross-that-bridge-when-we-come-to-it quality. But it has not. The critics have underestimated the amount of cohesion there is in our foreign policy and among its planners, both Democrats and Republicans as well as unofficial ones. The new world policy of the United States is every bit as definite, as unified and as positive as that of Russia.

What this dispatch attempts is a brief statement of the outline and essential parts of the new policy. It is not a picture of a policy originated as a whole or held as a whole by any one individual or small group, for the new policy did not come into existence that way. Rather it represents the area within which there is agreement of the leadership of the two parties and others who have a voice.

First Step, Treaties

1. The United States is going to restore the world to production as a going economic concern. In the restoration we will proceed on the basis of private ownership of industry and free enterprise, and free democratic government. Keeping that ideal for all, and rejecting communism everywhere, we will cooperate with countries which to some degree have modified their economic systems while retaining free democratic government.

2. As a first step, indispensable as the beginning of a world restored to production, we are going to proceed toward bringing about a status of formal peace with at least the part of Germany for which we and Britain are responsible, and with Japan. In this, we hope Russia will join, but hardly expect she will.

We will make one more effort to get Russia to go along, at the conference scheduled for next November. Lacking Russia, we will proceed toward bringing about a status of peace in cooperation with such nations as will unite with us in this purpose. We believe that many will.

3. The proposal that we make a separate peace with Germany and Japan, with Russia out because she does not wish to come in, met some objections after President Hoover made it and after his proposal received support in Washington. The objections were on various grounds. To all of them there is one answer. It is a question: what is the alternative? The only alternative is to wait until Russia is ready. But in Washington the conviction has grown that Russian policy sees gain in the postponement of peace, and therefore acts to obstruct it. Waiting for Russia would mean nothing until Europe is in collapse.

Distributed Burden

4. Restoring the world to production as a going economic concern will cost much money. Our new world policy recognizes this fully, and includes plans about how the money is to be procured and expended. We begin by recognizing that if we do not provide money for recovery of production, we shall have to provide it as charity and relief for starving peoples and prostrate countries. Outgo in this form would be both endless and futile, endless charity for an indefinite time. We have decided to make the expenditure in a way that will make Europe self-supporting.

5. Most of the money for restoration, nearly the whole of it, must come from the United States. But within the United States it will come from different sources.

A common assumption is that all the money will come from the Treasury and the taxpayers, and a common estimate of the amount is five billion dollars a year for five years, or figures even more extravagant. Persons disquieted by such a prospect should realize the reasons it will not take place. Our taxpayers cannot pay such amounts, probably would not if they could, and will not be called on to.

6. Some of the funds will come from the Treasury and the taxpayers, as the first installment did—the grant to Greece and Turkey. There may be other grants from the same source. But as the policy of restoring Europe to production becomes established and accepted, and as confidence is thus created, and especially as restoration actually gets under way, the funds will come from other sources, including official international banking organizations such as the World Bank, private banking institutions and extensions of credit by American industrial firms.

U. S. Doctors Meet Their Match

NUERNBERG (AP).—The Army's matchbox campaign against venereal disease has backfired.

Wives of officers have complained, it was learned today, against the matches sold at the post exchanges. The Army has thousands of match boxes each bearing a slogan such as:

"VD strikes at night."
"Use care."
"VD—Use a prophylactic."

The matches were purchased before American women came to Europe.

The complaints from the wives were that the slogans, perfectly all right to impress the soldiers, lacked a little something in propriety for the family life that is growing here.

So post exchange officers received orders in Nuernberg, Munich and Stuttgart to halt the sale of all matches.

Cigarette lighters are selling like hot cakes.

Coeducation Riles Jap Fifth-Grader

Tokyo (AP).—The new feminine equality in Japan finds opposition even among the youngest generation.

Fifth-grader Atsushi Nishikawa, in a recent letter to the newspapers, complained bitterly that "the girls at our school now take our baseball bats, gloves and balls and play ball while we boys have to play quietly inside the building. Our students' committee tried to pass a rule that girls must not make too much fuss in the classrooms and corridors but this was overruled by the girls.

"If this is coeducation, I think it should be abolished."

The Gallup Poll

Partial Veto Backed

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

MANY PRESIDENTS—and Mr. Truman is probably no exception—have wished they could veto parts of bills sent by Congress for White House approval.

With a momentous veto decision confronting Mr. Truman in the shape of the labor bill, the President must, under the Constitution, either reject the measure in whole or accept it in whole. Some students of Government have felt that this should be changed—that the President should have the power to pick out parts of bills for disapproval, especially in the case of appropriation bills.

There is wide public support for this contention. A survey by the Institute finds that among people who know what a veto is, sentiment is overwhelmingly in favor of permitting a President to veto some items in a bill without vetoing the whole measure.

8 in 10 Knew

IN PROBING the public's attitude, several questions were asked to find out how much people know about the subject of vetoes.

The first question was:

"Will you tell me what the term 'veto' means to you? For example, what does it mean when the President vetoes a bill sent him by Congress?"

Eight out of every 10 voters polled (80 per cent) gave a correct answer, while 20 per cent gave either an incorrect answer or said they didn't know.

The 80 per cent who indicated correct knowledge were asked:

"At the present time, when Congress passes a bill, the President cannot veto parts of that bill, but must accept it in full or veto it. Do you think this should be changed so that the President can veto SOME items in a bill without vetoing the entire bill?"

The vote of those who gave a correct definition (80 per cent) was:

Yes	49%
No	21
Don't know	10
	80%

The favorable ratio is more than 2-to-1.

Opinion on the matter of voting parts of bills was tested once before, in 1945. During that year's congressional session, Senator Vandenberg of Michigan proposed to allow the President to veto parts of appropriations bills. His proposal died in committee, but an Institute poll at the time found the public for it by a substantial majority.

Weaker on Details

TO SEE how many voters are accurately informed about congressional powers in regard to a veto, the Institute put this question to the 80 per cent who indicated correct knowledge of the meaning of the word veto.

"If the President vetoes a bill, can Congress override his veto?"

The results show the public very well informed.

Yes, it can override	70%
No, it can't	4
Don't know	6
	80%

The next question in the quiz was this:

"How much of a majority is required for the Senate and House to override a presidential veto?"

The correct answer—a two-thirds majority—was given by 44 per cent of all voters.

People who have had college training scored high on the definition of what a veto is and did well on the question of whether Congress can override one. On the matter of how large a majority is required to override, 2 out of every 10 college-trained persons interviewed either muffed the answer or didn't know.

Negro Schools Getting Their Share of Funds Only in Construction

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

IS THERE equality of educational opportunity for Negro and white children in the District public schools?

The Board of Education and Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning admit there isn't. But they say they are doing their best to build up the Negro schools to parity with the white.

Corning recently reported to the board that the District is now spending more money on Negro education than the law requires. But a survey of school spending shows that only in expenditures for new buildings are Negroes receiving more than their proportionate share of school funds. In other categories Negro schools get less than a proportionate shares.

Rapid growth of the city's Negro population and its shift to new areas of the city have created the need for additional buildings and during the war years most construction was halted.

Unfortunately, the more money the board spends on new buildings for Negro students the less it has to operate those schools.

7-Year Difference

CORNING'S statistics, based on the 1940 census, show that Negro students made up 34.1 per cent of the school population and received 44.2 per cent of school money.

But because of population changes in the last seven years, 44.8 per cent of the students attending public schools now are Negro.

The 44.8 per cent population figure and the 44.2 per cent for expenses would indicate that Negroes actually are receiving about their fair share of over-all funds. Negro residents who see their children attending classes in dilapidated and overcrowded buildings and on part-time schedules, doubt this apparent balance, however.

At present 6743 District students are attending school part time and all except 418 are Negro. Teachers in all Negro grades from elementary through high and vocational school are instructing from two to five more students a class than white teachers.

Only 39.07 per cent of school operating funds goes to Negro schools, but they are receiving 72.26 per cent of construction funds.

Halved in House

IN the 1947 budget the Board of Education requested 59 additional teachers for the Negro schools. When Corning appeared before the House subcommittee to justify his requests, he was asked how many actually were needed. He said 109. Congress approved 30.

Corning and the school board see no hope of putting the 6000 part-time Negro students on a full-time basis without congressional approval of a large-scale construction program.

In the 1948 budget the board asked $8,596,000 for new buildings, 56.3 per cent of it for Negro schools. The Commissioners trimmed the request to $2,123,000 and the Negro share to 48 per cent. This request is now before Congress.

Corning and the board recently urged the Commissioners to seek a 50-million-dollar Federal loan to build up the schools. The request warned of "tensions" and "extreme unrest" resulting from overcrowding in the Negro schools.

HOW 1947 SCHOOL BUDGET IS DIVIDED

	WHITE		NEGRO
	Amount spent	Per cent	Amount spent	Per cent
Administration	$129,179	58.07	$93,271	41.92
Supervision and Instruction	7,398,646	60.32	4,866,593	39.67
Vocational Education	138,044	61.26	87,280	38.73
Operation and Maintenance of Buildings and Grounds	1,106,325	65.12	592,360	34.87
Auxiliary Education	44,800	73.32	16,300	26.67
Total	$8,816,994	60.92	$5,655,804	39.07
Capital Outlay	744,150	27.73	1,939,230	72.26
Total	$9,561,144	55.73	$7,595,034	44.27

Note: Of the total budget of $19,817,156, $2,660,978 is spent jointly.

'Tugwelltown' of '30s Has Shamed Critics

That is a total of 1900 units, far below Greenbelt's capacity. They occupy only 200 of the tract's 3300 acres. Federal Public Housing Authority officials say that 4000 dwellings could be comfortably accommodated.

The 885 units erected in the '30s, ranging from bachelor apartments and honeymoon bungalows to four-bedroom houses, were supposed to be the first installment toward a goal of 3000. But lifting of the depression and changes in the political picture arrested further construction.

A few years ago some Greenbelters formed an association whose purpose is to buy their homes from the Government. FPHA officials say that eventual transfer of the property to private ownership is desirable but that it simply is not salable at present.

It would not be feasible, they point out, for the Government to sell the dwellings piecemeal. And no investor has been found who was willing to buy the whole works and, besides paying the price, provide assurance that the tenants' interests and the community's character would be protected.

19-Million-Dollar Job

OLIVER C. WINSTON, director of the FPHA general field office and titular landlord of Greenbelt's residents, estimates that the original 890 units (exclusive of the 10 non-Federally owned) cost 14 million dollars, plus $570,000 for land. Uncle Sam put out $4,500,000 for the 1000 "defense homes"—hastily built dwellings of asbestos siding which lack the architectural finesse and charming landscaping of the "character" houses.

Greenbelt's warmest supporters confess that it is uneconomic: its sewage disposal plant and police and fire establishments should be serving 3000 to 4000 families and not 1900. But construction costs today are prohibitive. It probably will be some time before you hear of any large-scale building at Greenbelt.

Rents are graded according to the tenant's income, and there have been two increases since the first dwellings were occupied on September 30, 1937. Sixty-five dollars is the top. Only veterans may join the waiting list, and they are told that they cannot possibly be accommodated in less than one year.

"Yes, and it might be closer to two years," volunteers Mrs. Mary Jane Kinzer, who has charge of family selection.

There isn't much turnover, she explains. Greenbelt still has 313 families who were original inhabitants—202 of them living in the same houses and apartments which they rented in the beginning.

Prophets Were Wrong

MRS. KINZER'S sense of humor is still intact, though it takes a daily beating from people who think Greenbelt is awful for barring dogs and other pets, who think the community rules are too strict and who think they ought to have a three-bedroom apartment even though they do not have the required number of children.

A decade ago the view-with-alarmers were predicting that this newfangled project would bring in "undesirable elements" and eventually become a big slum. Some said Greenbelt would become an oasis for long-haired New Dealers. As recently as 1940 it was charged that the community was bolshevistic.

Well, Greenbelt today is a pretty nice place, with a community spirit that gets things done.

The town's cooperative stores are in the black. So are the cooperative buses which, about once a month, give free rides as dividends. At meetings of the citizens' association, American Legion post, sewing circles, etc., there is plenty of outspoken griping—a sure sign of a healthy, democratic community.

As Town Manager Gobbel says, inhaling a chestful of that good old Greenbelt air:

"There's nothing like it."

Austria's Loss

Zistersdorf Fields Fuel Red Fleet

By Lynn Heinzerling

VIENNA, June 7 (AP).—The Zistersdorf oil fields in lower Austria, which loom so forebodingly over the deliberations of the four-power treaty commission, are now pumping oil for the Soviet occupation of Germany, for Russia and for the Black Sea fleet, Allied officials said today.

This distribution prevails despite the fact that Austria, wrestling with a severe food shortage for two years, was able to get only enough gasoline to fill half her requirements for agriculture this spring, Austrian sources said.

The Soviet administration has agreed that 60 per cent of Zistersdorf production should go to Austria, but in actuality Austria receives between 40 and 50 per cent.

Blocking Treaty

THE RUSSIANS have claimed the Zistersdorf fields, whose annual production in 1944 was about 8,491,000 barrels, for reparations, asserting that the fields were owned by the Germans. Similarly they have laid claim to a large part of the industry in their zone of Austria and to the Danube Steamship Co., formerly one of the largest on the Danube.

The oil fields have been the chief obstacle to the Allied treaty commission now sitting in Vienna determining facts in the matter of German assets as requested by the Moscow conference.

The Russians have demanded that the question of oil be taken up by the commission and discussed on Soviet terms and definitions before commission experts are put to work on it. The commission has moved hardly an inch since the meeting opened more than three weeks ago.

Austrian officials say the Zistersdorf fields can fill all of Austria's needs and still provide a surplus for export vitally needed by the Austrian economy. From the peak production attained by the Germans during the war, production fell to 3,150,000 barrels in 1945. It rose to double that amount in 1946 and is believed to be at about the 1946 level now.

The Russian management, however, is suffering from lack of new equipment and of oil experts. The Russians advertise intermittently in the Vienna press for oil workers, offering bonuses and extra food rations.

Reserves Pile Up

ONLY a very small portion of Zistersdorf's production is required for the Russian occupation army in Austria. Oil experts estimate that the reserves at Zistersdorf total some 56 million barrels, of which about half is inferior grade oil.

The products of Zistersdorf, Austrian officials claim, are being delivered to the Russian zone in Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia and to the Black Sea port of Constanza for the Red Fleet. It was impossible to obtain comment on these reports from Soviet sources in Vienna.

Recently the Russians started drilling for new oil in the Neusiedl area of lower Austria, but the results are not known.

U. S. Guns to Latins Will Only Keep Status Quo

euverable in any combination of nationalities and following the same procedures in supply, communications and staff work.

Furthermore, they would have fleets at sea, small it is true, but fleets nevertheless, composed of relatively modern vessels and operating under a common set of rules. While these fleets might not bulk large in numbers or firepower, they would serve admirably for reconnaisance and to force dispersion of any enemy fleet which might be brought against this hemisphere.

'Little U. N.'—With Teeth

FROM the political standpoint, it would be expected that the nations of Latin America would come to look upon the United States as their friend and partner in guaranteeing their own security from outside aggression. Such a program would, in fact, give the nations with most at stake an active role in enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine, a diplomatic strategem which has depended since it was formulated on British backing.

Under the Act of Chapultepec an act of aggression against one American nation is to be considered aggression against all the others. Means to meet such aggression include use of arme force, a provision which, in effect, makes possible a littl United Nations of the Weste Hemisphere whose police force would be the integrated and uniformly equipped armies of its members.

As a matter of fact, some degree of hemisphere collaboration has been going on these last four or five years under the war powers of the President. As part of this "interim program" the United States already has military missions in all South American countries except Uruguay (which hasn't asked for one) and in all of Central America except San Domingo and Haiti. Officers and men of these nations have been in our schools for three years now, and we have sent most of them arms and equipment for demonstration and familiarization.

Now, taking up in order the questions which have been raised by Mr. Truman's renewed request for authorization to put hemispheric cooperation into effect:

1. It is difficult to see how supplying arms to Latin-American nations on the basis of the program could lead to an armament race. The total amount of arms in each country would not be increased, since each country would turn in obsolete or European type weapons in exchange for those it received. Should any nation be inclined to launch an arms race, it would do so from its present base; to change the character of the base could have no possible effect on the intentions of an administration already determined to outarm its neighbors.

2. Increasing the power of existing armies could add nothing to the effectiveness of revolutionary minded cliques, since power is always relative. The party which has arms, no matter whether they are smooth-bore muskets or machine guns, is obviously stronger than the party which has no weapons at all. Successful revolutionaries in Latin America generally have employed the existing armies, which have been able to overpower their opponents which had no armies. In such cases, troops armed with slingshots would have been as effective as any others.

The same holds true in countering the fear that the cooperation program might lead to wars among the nations of Latin America. Since the relative strengths of those nations would not be altered, neither would the ability of one to make war upon another be altered. Any increase in the military strength of one nation would have to come through the purchase of arms outside the program, a facility as readily available at the present moment as it would be if the program were in effect.

The Argentine Problem

3. If the program is to be carried out completely and effectively, it will be necessary to include Argentina, whatever its government may be. To do otherwise would be to leave a prepared beachhead for an enemy's use in our rear.

4. Domination of its southern neighbors by the United States could not possibly follow adoption of the cooperative program. Nothing can be done under the program without the consent of both parties to any arrangement and, in fact, the initiative must come from the receiving country. Missions to these countries would be advisory only; they could not take any part in their governments.

5. Of course Russia doesn't like it. Much of the opposition to the program has come from Communist organizations which are the leaders in charging "imperialism," "domination," "unilateral action" and the like. Yet many of these organization are wholly in accord with Russia's action in forcibly surrounding herself with states not only "friendly" but subservient.

That Russia has taken such steps as a defensive measure is readily understood and volubly excused, even though Russia has accomplished its end by force. If the program for inter-American cooperation can accomplish the same end by friendly negotiation, by a fair exchange of materials and by agreement for the good of all without interference in the internal affairs of any nation, it should at least be given thoughtful consideration.

Mr. Truman Has a Capitol Idea

By Bob Considine

NEW YORK, June 7.—Robert M. Hutchins, chancellor of the University of Chicago, visited President Truman.

"How are you getting along with the Republicans?" Hutchins asked the Chief Executive.

"Just fine," Truman grinned. "I toss them one insoluble problem a week and let them take it from there."

* * * *

Herbert Bayard Swope, who was there at the end of "The World," is a man who can get a flourish into even a telegram. Swope arranged a party for some visiting newspapermen and it was to be built around the presence of Bernard Baruch, his friend.

But it had to be canceled.

"I am calling off Thursday's party," Swope wired the invited guests, "because Mr. Baruch has turned his left—no symbolism—ankle and is bedridden."

Fate's Timetable

TED COLLINS, one of the most successful men in radio, owes it all to a train he missed. It happened 18 years ago, and he forgets now where he was going or why. Anyway, he had an evening on his hands in New York. He went to a musical comedy and heard a soprano named Kate Smith.

Collins had a job with a recording firm and arranged to have Kate given a tryout. They've been in business ever since and are currently splitting something like $15,000 a week.

Curiously, in what is often a cynical business, they've never had a contract. And they've promised that if either leaves radio for any reason, the other will follow within a week.

Kieran's Comeback

JOHN KIERAN, author of the "Information Please Almanac," once took an intellectual revenge on a snobbish headmaster that still ranks high on any list of great retorts.

Invited by the coach of the school to speak (this was before the world discovered John had a brain), he was introduced to the Latin scholars by the headmaster. The headmaster ended his introduction with an aside, in Latin, which brought a chuckle from the students. He said, in effect, "Let's make the best of this ordeal."

John rose and replied: "Gentlemen, the only thing that outraged me more than the boorishness of your headmaster was his use of the present participle instead of the past pluperfect in the quotation."

Then he delivered his speech in Latin instead of English and left.

Taking Pictures

Keep Snapshots Hidden Unless They're Worth Bragging About

By Ollie Atkins

NOT EXACTLY a box camera shot from the old family album, this study of a Mexican shows what can be done if you know your stuff. It was made by Justin N. Locke of the National Photographic Society on a recent tour of Mexico. Locke will be speaker and critic at an open meeting of the N.P.S. to be held at 8:15 p. m. Wednesday in the National Museum Auditorium, 10th st. and Constitution ave. nw.

ONE of life's great bores is when the host assumes a fond smile and drags out the family album.

Who hasn't spent a wearing hour squinting at tiny snapshots mounted in a scrapbook? It's one of America's great house guest hazards.

Two leading camera manufacturers estimate the number of camera fans in the country between 20 million and 25 million. So your chances of being a snapshot artist are pretty good.

Are your pictures something to brag about? Or do you have to give a brief lecture explaining that if the camera hadn't moved or if the shadow of the house hadn't been in the way you could see Aunt Minnie's Model T, except that you would also have to disregard a double exposure of Dot's new baby.

Looking over an old family album, it is easy to understand why the pictures appear stiff. Simple processes of photography and the then popular sepia-toned prints just cry "old fashioned" to modern eyes.

Luxury Imports

AS A wartime necessity many soldier-photographers were turned out with a working knowledge of complicated cameras. Many overseas troops came into ownership of excellent cameras. Add to this the increasing popularity of photography generally and you would expect that the pictures of mom, dad and sister would improve to some degree. In too many cases they haven't. Family snapshots have the same old box camera look. Too much magic is expected of the machine

Inventor Edwin Land has developed a revolutionary camera which will turn out finished pictures one minute after the shutter is snapped. But for a while you will not see many of these. And the operator must still be technically correct and must point the camera at what constitutes a picture in the first place or a lot of spoiled film will crank out of the chemical pod at the back of this new apparatus.

So back to your old camera. Use one camera, one type of film, and try to make all your pictures in reasonably good light. There are so many variables in photography that you'll be smart to standardize these items right away.

This standardization of equipment is very important. Returning veterans have brought fancy cameras from Europe. The envious vacationer feels he should decorate his shoulder with a classy machine and a bag full of gadgets. This is very well of you know what to do with the stuff. But don't be just a camera collector.

People are often misled into thinking that the better the camera the better the picture. The camera is just a machine—you must run it. Any one thing improperly set on your camera will spoil the picture.

Plenty of Film

BOTH the Ansco and Eastman people tell me that amateur films will be generally available in all sizes this summer. There will be a shortage of new cameras, however. Prices on all photographic supplies should stay steady this season.

NOTICE TO CAMERA CLUBS—Announcements and club news, as well as pictures, may be sent to this column for publication. Address material to: Ollie Atkins, Camera Column, Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C.

Ollie Atkins, who will conduct The Washington Post's Camera Column, is well known in newspaper photographic circles from New York to New Orleans. He is now Washington photographer for the Saturday Evening Post. Some of his wartime Red Cross pictures from the Italian theater were of exhibition caliber. Before the war he was with the Washington Daily News, and prior to that he conducted a camera column for the Birmingham Post.

Stirring Discovery

Puts Heat On Coffee

TULSA, OKLA. (AP).—The average restaurant serves its coffee too hot, compelling the average man to sit and stir it for an average of six minutes before sipping it.

And that means, at the rate of three cups a day, the same average man puts in the equivalent of about 4½ solid days a year just sitting and stirring coffee, says Roger V. Devlin, columnist for the Tulsa Tribune, who set a chemist friend to work with thermometers and a stop watch.

Here is his report on the chemist's other findings:

"The average cup of coffee has a temperature of 168 degrees when it reaches you . . . Anything above 144 degrees is much too hot, and can actually damage the lips. A brew of 136 degrees can be taken in small driblets, but unless you allow it to cool a bit in the mouth, you'll probably wind up with warts on your esophagus.

"From 133 to 126 degrees is good hot coffee, he says, from 123 to 125 he described as having that 'smooth' feeling. But when the coffee sagged to 118 degrees, it began to taste a little cool, and coffee at 106 degrees was 'stone cold'."

Adding an average portion of cream reduced coffee's temperature only 2 degrees and sugar cut it down only 1 degree, Devlin reported. "Vigorous stirring, contrary to the opinion held by many, reduced the heat by only 1 degree. Saucering the coffee cut it by 3 degrees."

Greek Extremity

Porter Report Outdated

By M. W. Fodor
Post Reporter

ATHENS, June 7.—Frost which killed the grapes, drought which ruined the crops; a civil war which creates chaos; greediness of the rich, extreme pauperism of the poor; lack of a proper system of taxation; high interest rates, high prices and lack of confidence in their own currency, are the problems which complicate Greece's economic reconstruction.

At least one third of this year's crops have been lost. Should rain come in the next 10 days, it might help the crops in the extreme north but would be too late for central and southern Greece.

In the fighting in the north the guerillas often take with them the entire population of a village and leave the place without harvest hands.

Industrial production has attained only 60 to 62 per cent of prewar levels, partly for lack of raw materials but also because the manufacturers wish to boost prices through scarcity. The industrials here work for huge profits, often as high as 80 per cent.

Artificial Embargo

AS TO exports, high prices and the artificial rate of the drachmae create difficulties. The real value of the drachmae is estimated by exporters at 7000 to 8000 to the dollar, but they are forced to export at the official rate, 5000 to the dollar. American buyers can get good quality Turkish tobacco in Samsun for 85 cents a pound; the price of Greek tobacco would be $1.10.

Yet it would be easy to stabilize the drachmae. Nothing is wrong with the currency except lack of confidence.

When the war ended for Greece in October, 1944, the drachmae was quoted at 50 billion to the dollar. During the ensuing civil war the inflation went into the trillions to the dollar, and the Greeks fear that what happened a few years ago may happen again.

Therefore they are not anxious to sell their goods, because to them oil and textiles seem to be a better investment than drachmae in the bank.

Ruinous Interest

YET MONEY is scarce. There is a 35 per cent arbitrage on the money market; borrowed money sometimes demands interest as high as 52 per cent per annum.

The problems our mission faces are enormous. Paul Porter drafted an excellent report on the situation. But whoever is to be in charge of the economic side of our mission had better throw away the Porter report and draft his own. The situation has changed completely in the last 60 days, partly because of the internal situation, partly because of the increased intensity of the civil war and greatly because of the drought.

Neutral persons who know the situation estimate Greece's wheat deficiency this year at 700,000 tons. If we take the world market price of June wheat, plus the high cost of transport, we can estimate the cost of one ton of wheat shipped to Athens at $104. This alone would eat up a considerable amount of our loan to Greece.

Snead Blows, Loses Lead to Three Others

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

EVEN with the St. Louis Cardinals in eighth place, the Nation's bookmakers are showing scorn for the rest of the league by quoting the Cards as the pennant favorites at 5 to 2, with the Boston Braves second choice at 3 to 1 . . . when the Giants were leading the league the other day, their pennant chances were still quoted at 8 to 1 . . . The Red Sox, despite playing only .500 ball, are still the American League pennant favorites at 2 to 1, with Detroit second choice at 5 to 2, and the Yankees rated next at 3 to 1 . . . Sammy Snead, the world's greatest golfer with woods and irons, hied himself to the practice course immediately after his 66 in the opening round of the National Capital open in which his unsteady putting cost him at least three strokes . . . his practice session consisted of perfecting his woods and irons, and he never lifted his putter from his bag . . . Dixie Walker of the Dodgers is now attempting the last word in strategy against different kinds of pitching. He uses different bats against left handers and right handers . . . Middleweight Jake Lamotta, who saved himself $15,000 in forfeit money by making 154 pounds against Tony Janiro the other night, lost his forfeit money two months ago when he couldn't make 161 pounds for a fight with Tommy Bell . . . Paul Stenn, the big tackle who was sold by the Redskins to the Pittsburgh Steelers, is happy about the whole thing, in contrast to his unhappiness with the Redskins.

POVICH

GEORGE ALBACH, the Dallas, Tex., professional, who was Babe Didrikson's first golf instructor, relates that six months after the Babe hit her first drive she was out-driving and beating him at medal play . . . on the New York tracks, the Pinkerton detectives who succeed in grabbing bookmakers who are doing business on the premises, are given an extra day's pay for each arrest as a reward . . . it's tough to get a $5000 bet down on a horse away from the track these days, following the wave of numerous "good things" that have come down in front and left the betting commissioners wary of the smart money . . . Sammy Snead's recent tour of South Africa was not the financial success he had anticipated. "The King and Queen of England were in South Africa at that time and they took the edge off our matches by visiting four cities on the day before we played there," he said . . . Bobby Locke is justifiably griped by the constant reference to the "unorthodoxy" of his golf swing, saying "it's the orthodox swing of the British golfers and in England your American pros could be called unorthodox if the English were of a mind to do so." . . . the last seen of Rocky Graziano, he was being picked up off the floor, knocked out in the sixth round by Middleweight Champion Tony Zale, but he's now the 7 to 5 favorite to beat Zale in their July 16 rematch at Chicago.

HOTTEST PITCHER in the American League at this moment is 38-year-old Spud Chandler of the Yankees who in his last three starts has pitched a pair of three-hitters and a two-hitter . . . Dizzy Trout, big right hander of the Tigers, is aiming for a league record, but it isn't a pitching record. He's trying to surpass the mark of nine home runs by Wes Farrell, which stands as the most homers ever hit by a pitcher in a single season . . . when Faultless, the Preakness winner, finished fifth in the Belmont Stakes, there was $315,230 bet on him in the win-place-show mutuels . . . one of the fights Billy Conn is considering in his intended comeback is a bout with Jackie Cranford, Washington heavyweight, at Griffith Stadium under the promotion of Gabe Menendez . . . the Curtis Shepphard-Archie Moore heavyweight fight at the stadium on June 16 drew a $26,000 gate at Baltimore when they last met . . . when Joe Gannon fights Ken Stribling at the stadium tomorrow night, that comely rooter in the first-row ringside seat will be his sister, Patricia Gannon, who is secretary to Clark Griffith . . . a question that stumped a Chicago radio station's listeners for a week and built up a considerable jackpot before it was answered, was: "Who is Burt Shotton?"

IN HIS NEW BOOK, "The ABC's of Racing," Dan Parker's first advice to folks who want to beat the races is: "Don't try." . . . Joe Louis maintained his reputation for never saying the wrong thing when asked if he expected his new-born son to become a champion. His comment was: "He will be, if he's as lucky as I am." . . . the National League's two top hitters, Harry Walker and Enos Slaughter, are left handers in contrast to Lou Boudreau and Joe DiMaggio, who top the American League . . . Hillis Layne, sold to the Coast League by the Nats' Chattanooga farm club, is hitting .380 in that circuit at a time when the Nats are lacking a third baseman who can hit . . . Clark Griffith, no bluenose, but refusing to sell beer in Griffith Stadium because "I'm not in the saloon business," recently was startled to discover that his Charlotte and Chattanooga farm clubs have been selling the amber beverage for years at their home games . . . after July 1, when Larry McPhail's contract with an airline expires, the Yankees won't be asked to fly . . . when Dave Ferris was beaten in Boston recently, it marked his first Fenway Park defeat since the 1945 season. He didn't pitch a losing game there last year . . . the Red Sox hope to make a deal for Cecil Travis or Vern Stephens before the June 15 trading deadline falls . . . the pro who wins the most money on the tournament circuit has supplanted in recent years the winner of the United States open as the best-known golfer in the country . . . Sammy Snead's weakness at canning putts leads to a one-word description of his play on the greens: Uncanny.

St. Louis, June 7 (U.P.).—Rookie Frank Shea stopped the St. Louis Browns with three hits today, pitching the New York Yankees to a 3-1 victory for his seventh straight triumph since he was beaten early in the season by the Boston Red Sox.

Shea also took a hand in the scoring, getting a double in the third inning and scoring the first run of the game later on a long fly by Tommy Henrich.

Joe DiMaggio belted his eighth homer of the year in the fourth inning with the bases empty for what proved to be the decisive tally, and Henrich's double scored Snuffy Stirnweiss with the final run.

Doubles by Paul Lehner and Al Zarilla in the fourth inning gave the Browns their only tally. The only other hit was a single by Nelson Potter in the fifth.

Nats Lose Another To Pesky Chisox, 4-0

By Al Costello
Post Reporter

Chicago, June 7.—Luke Appling, veteran White Sox shortstop, who will be honored with a special day tomorrow, picked today to do his celebrating as he joined hands with former Nat Joe Haynes in mopping up the Nats, 4-0, before a slim 4248 Saturday crowd.

It was the seventh straight time the Nats have been cuffed around this year by the White Sox without a victory, and it was the fourth loss in six games on the current Western swing. It was Haefner's fifth setback against one win.

Haynes handcuffed the Nats with four singles in an eight-inning relief appearance that came about when Starter Johnny Rigney decided his sore shoulder still wasn't right after pitching a hitless first inning. Haynes permitted only one Nat to reach third and only three more to get as far as second. And always two were out on every occasion.

Appling's Hit Scores Pair

Appling, taking advantage of a grievous error on a pop fly in the fifth inning by the usually reliable Gerry Priddy, broke up what was a scoreless hurling duel between unlucky Mickey Haefner and Haynes by lacing a line drive double to left that sent the first pair of White Sox runs cantering across the plate—all that were eventually to be needed.

The whole business was wrapped up in that fifth frame when the Sox scored three unearned runs and ruined the ball game—for the Nats, that is.

Haefner was sailing along nicely in the fifth. He had given up only three hits when Tresh singled with one out and was forced at second by Haynes. Haefner made Floyd Baker pop up and the inning appeared over when Dave Philley hoisted another popup. Priddy called for it.

Gerry lost the ball in the sun, which picked that inopportune time to break through the overhanging clouds. He staggered, finally made a frantic clutch at the falling leather which hit the heel of his glove and bounced away.

Jones Clouts Triple

That put men on first and second with two out and brought up Lucious Lucius. He slammed the second pitch on a line to deep left

Poole Will Play At 'Ole Miss

Memphis, Tenn., June 7 (AP).—Barney Poole, giant end of the Army's great football teams of the last three years, will continue his gridiron play at the University of Mississippi next fall.

The 6-foot-3, 225-pound Gloucester, Miss., athlete, who formally left West Point this week, made the announcement here today during an air flight stopover on his way to Oxford, Miss.

Counties Will Have Johnson Baseball Play

Plans will be completed this week for the extension of the Walter Johnson Memorial Baseball School into Washington's surrounding counties.

Included in the plans are Prince Georges, Arlington, Alexandria, Montgomery and Fairfax counties. The Johnson School in these areas will begin around the date of the closing of public schools.

Baseball classes will be held in a manner similar to the way in which they were conducted in Washington from April 19 through May 10. Whenever possible, members of the Washington Senators will be on hand to instruct the youngsters, 14-years old and under.

The early morning rain of yesterday put the damper on the planned presentation ceremonies for the Johnson School graduates of the city. As a result, only one fourth of the 500 diplomas were presented.

Pete English of the D. C. Recreation Department, who is in charge of the diploma presentation, said last night that those kids who didn't receive them yesterday, would be able to get them this week.

The diploma will be sent to the public or private school which the Johnson School kid regularly attends. He will be able to pick up his diploma there at a date to be announced in The Post early this week.

Booklets on "How To Play Better Baseball," inside tips by the Nats as told to Shirley Povich, were distributed yesterday. Those who didn't get their booklets will be able to get them at the 22 Johnson School locations next Saturday.

Selkirk Becomes Yank Farm Head

Newark, N. J., June 7 (AP).—The Newark Bears International League baseball club announced tonight its manager George Selkirk would become supervisor of Yankee farm teams in the New York Yankee chain succeeding Bill Skiff, who is to manage the Newark team.

Selkirk, noting the performance of the sixth place Bears "to date has been a bitter disappointment," said he regretted that "circumstances make it necessary for me to turn over the reins as manager of the Newark Bears."

He said he believed, however, the action was the best for "my own personal interests and those of the organization."

"Baseball has been my life," Selkirk said, "and I welcome this opportunity to broaden my experience in another administrative capacity."

Veteran Race Driver Killed in Accident

Fall River, Mass., June 7 (AP).—Edward (Cyclone) Casterline, 32, of Reading, Mass., midget automobile racer and winner of last year's Bay State championship, was fatally injured last night during the feature event of Seekonk, R. I., Auto Speedway.

Casterline died at Truesdale Hospital early today of fractured ribs and internal injuries. His car went out of control and crashed over a guard rail.

Laabs Sold by A's

Buffalo, N. Y., June 7 (AP).—The Buffalo Bisons of the International League announced today the outright purchase of Chet Laabs, Philadelphia Athletics outfielder, for an undisclosed sum.

Bobby Locke, Payton, Mangrum Tied at 203

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Sammy Snead blew his top, a three-stroke lead and perhaps the National Capital Open championship yesterday.

Unnerved when a corps of photographers fixed their lenses on him blasting out of a trap on the second hole, Sambo skyrocketed to a one-over-par 73 and a 54-hole total of 204 at the Prince Georges County Club.

While the hot-shot slammer from Hot Springs, Va., was exploding and scrambling, Pre-Tourney Favorite Bobby Locke of South Africa, National Open Champion Lloyd Mangrum, and 24-year-old George Payton, Hampton, Va., projected themselves into a three-way tie for the lead at 203.

All the drama of yesterday's hectic scramble didn't take place on the ill-fated—for Snead—second hole. There were heartbreaks, headaches and cheers on the eighteenth, too, with the final threesome of the day, Snead, Payton and Ellsworth Vines providing it.

Payton, with a chance to become the undisputed tourney leader, three-putted for a bogey five while Vines did likewise to drop back into a four-way deadlock for fourth place at 204 with Snead, Lew Worsham, Washington, and Porky Oliver, Wilmington, Del.

To share driver's seat with the heralded Locke and the comparatively unknown Payton, Mangrum had his finest round of the tourney—a sparkling 32—34—66.

Locke scored 33—35—68 to go with his 36-hole total of 135 and Payton flashed around in 69 strokes an outgoing 34 and an incoming 35.

Mangrum gained more ground than any of the contestants yesterday, picking up seven strokes on the slipping Snead. Lloyd was 137 starting the semifinal round against Sam's 131. Locke, at 135, gained five.

Wright Hurts Own Chances

Payton, tied at the halfway point with Tommy Wright of Knoxville, Tenn., with 134s, clipped Sam for four. Wright practically killed any chances he had of winning with a 73 for a 207.

Worsham checked in with his third consecutive four-under 68 and Oliver duplicated that to move into the 204 bracket with him, Snead and Vines.

Snead had already lost one stroke to Payton on the first hole when the youthful Virginian got his first birdie against Sam's par. And Sam was not in the best humor when his second shot on the next hole was trapped.

Encircled by most of the gallery of 5000, Sam prepared to blast out. As he stood there squinting at his effort, the cameramen cracked down. The ball sailed over the green and as it did, Snead looked up unpleasantly at the picture-makers.

Just at that time, policemen, who had been giving the photographers a bad time all day, shoved one of them, an argument ensued and Sam was further distracted. He finally holed out in a bogey five.

Payton, playing with the iron nerve of a tourney-tried veteran, dropped a seven-footer for a birdie three and Snead's three-stroke lead was gone.

Sam finished the side in 36, two

Dodgers to Pad Ebbets Field Wall

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 7 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodger management announced today plans to pad the entire Ebbets Field wall to prevent injuries such as that which hospitalized Brook flychaser Pete Reiser Wednesday night.

"We will work out all details at a conference Tuesday noon," said Arthur Mann, assistant to Dodger President Branch Rickey, "and if things are satisfactory we hope to be able to have the job completed by the time the team returns from its trip next month."

Mann said the wall will be padded with a nitrogen gas-filled sponge rubber similar to the padding used by paratroopers during the war to break the shock of landings. The substance is weather resistant and can be applied with a special rubber adhesive.

Harridge Fines Hutchinson $50

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—Freddie Hutchinson sprang out of the dugout the other afternoon and started throwing some punches at a couple of New York Yankees—and it's going to cost him $50, President Will Harridge of the American League informed him yesterday.

It was all a part of the fight involving Catcher Hal Wagner of the Tigers and Catcher Ralph Houk of the New York Yankees. Harridge also informed Houk that $50 would be deducted from his paycheck for his part in the affair.

Redskins Sign Ernest Alther

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 7.—Ernest C. (Junior) Alther of this city has been signed by the Washington Redskins of the National Professional Football League to a 1947 contract, it was reported yesterday in Washington.

One of this city's great gridiron products, Alther was a star lineman at Syracuse University. He was a Marine Corps officer during the war.

Mud Stops Congressmen

AT LEAST nine Democratic and nine Republican Congressmen are resting comfortably today, instead of nursing aching backs and strained muscles.

They had been slated to do battle on the baseball diamond at Griffith Stadium yesterday. The game was called off because of wet grounds.

In announcing postponement, Representative C. W. Bishop of Illinois, 57-year-old captain-manager-second baseman for the Republican nine, commented:

"I guess this makes us look like the old lady who lost her almanac. Anyway, that rain made the diamond pretty muddy—and you know how shy Congressmen are about mud slinging!"

The game definitely will be played, some time after July 4, and before congressional adjournment, he added. Proceeds will go to the Metropolitan Police Boys Club. Tickets now held will be good for the new date.

Representative Emory H. Price of Florida, speaking for the Democratic team, said he will in-

Kelly Wins Sculls

Philadelphia, June 7 (AP).—Jack Kelly, jr., grooming for his second try at the Diamond Sculls championship at the British Royal Henley Regatta, today made his first 1947 race on the Schuylkill River a winning one. Kelly, rowing for Vespers Club, defeated Clubmate Joe McIntyre in a special match race, rowing the mile and a quarter in 6:59. Kelly finished second in the Diamond Sculls last year.

'I'm Hitting 'Em,' Says the Babe, After Hot 71

Gullane, Scotland, June 7 (AP). Babe Didrikson Zaharias, American woman golfer who lashes the ball as far off the tee as a man, fired a red-hot 71 over the windswept Gullane course today and announced "I'm really hitting the ball." She was practicing for her bid to become the first American ever to win the British women's championship.

The Babe played 29 holes today and said she was four under par for the day. The tournament starts Monday.

British sportswriters already are resigned to seeing the Babe carry the trophy—last big British golfing prize still in British hands—off to the United States with her. None, however, envisaged the probability of an all-American final, such as American men pulled off last week in the British Amateur championship. But the possibility was there, nevertheless.

The Babe is the only Yankee in the top half of the draw.

Suspended Player To Appeal Life Ban

St. Joseph, Mo., June 7 (AP).—Al McElreath, Muskogee, Western Association outfielder suspended for life from organized baseball, said today he would appeal the ruling made by George Trautman, president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs.

McElreath was suspended for allegedly approaching another player in an effort to throw a game and for failing to play his best on two occasions.

"I talked to Mr. Trautman this morning about my next move," he told the St. Joseph News Press today in a long-distance telephone conversation. "He said I would have to appeal to Clarence Rowland, and I am getting ready to do that."

The Stobbs family of Norfolk, Va., had a stormy time yesterday at the George Washington-Granby baseball game for the Virginia high school championship. Bill Stobbs, father and coach, was ejected from the game; so was one son, Chuck, star Granby pitcher, while another son, Dick, 9 years old, got his hands on a wild throw and helped G. W. to score a run. Presidents Beat Granby In 10 Innings

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

George Washington's Presidents of Alexandria won their first Virginia high school baseball championship yesterday by defeating Granby's Comets of Norfolk, 5-4, in an excitement-filled 10-inning game at Alexandria.

A two-base hit to center by Corky Fones, his fourth hit of the game, drove in Jimmy Gahagan with the winning run with one out in the overtime frame.

The game was marked by an eventful third inning, when the Presidents pushed over three runs on three errors and a freak infield single, and Granby lost its pitching star, Chuck Stobbs, and Chuck's dad, Bill Stobbs, the acting coach.

The younger Stobbs had retired the first six men he faced on four strikeouts and two infield chances when the fireworks started. G. W.'s Buzzy Brown tapped a grounder to second, but Granby First Baseman Carmen Infantino juggled the throw. Umpire Sherman Johnson called Brown safe. Coach Stobbs rushed out to protest, ended up being ejected from the players' bench.

Brown attempted to steal second and seemed to be an easy out, but Shortstop Johnny Bull bobbled the throw and Umpire Bucky Buscher ruled that Buzzy was safe. When the younger Stobbs objected too vooiferously, he too was put out of the game, being replaced by Larry Brown. The latter pitched creditable ball the rest of the way.

The Presidents wound up with three runs in the inning when Gahagan and Dohner walked. When Catcher Hank Foiles tried to pick Dobner off first, Brown scored. First Baseman Infantino then threw wild over the catcher's head, and Gahagan scored. Dohner crossed the plate on Fones' infield single that hit the plate, bounced so high that he beat the throw to first.

G.W. ran its lead up to 4-0 in the fifth on a single by Pitcher Bobby Hooker, an infield out, and Fones' second single.

Granby cut the deficit to two runs in the seventh on a two-base error by Billy Rorer, an unsuccessful attempt at a force play by Rorer, and a single to right by Dave Mundy. The Comets tied it in the ninth on another miscue by Rorer, a triple by Mundy and a single by Cox Joyne.

Gahagan started off the G.W. tenth with a walk, was sacrificed to second, and danced in with the winning run on Fones' double to center.

Three Stobbs Men Ejected From Game

THE MEN in Bill Stobbs' family of Norfolk, Va.—father and two sons—had an exciting time at the Granby-George Washington High School game at Alexandria yesterday for the Virginia championship. All three were ejected from the contest.

Bill Stobbs, former three-letter athlete at Washington and Jefferson College and later coach at Wittenburg College, is coach of the Granby baseball team.

Chuck, his 17-year-old son, is the team's star pitcher. He is the lad who was named the outstanding player of the 1946 Esquire All-Star baseball game at Chicago. He has been All-State in basketball, football and baseball for the past two years.

His 9-year-old brother, Dickie, is mascot of the Granby team.

The ejection of the Stobbs family started in the last half of the third inning. The score was 0-0, and Chuck was pitching excellent ball. Not a batter had reached first, and Chuck had already fanned four.

Then G. W.'s Buzzy Brown tapped a grounder to second and was called safe when First Baseman Carmen Infantino juggled the ball. The elder Stobbs rushed onto the field and protested—too vociferously—that Infantino had possession long enough to retire Brown.

Umpire Jimmie Lyles put Coach C. Stobbs off the field.

ONE STOBBS DOWN, two to go.

On the next pitch, Brown tried to steal second, and appeared to be an easy out until Shortstop John Bull dropped the throw. Pitcher Stobbs rushed out to second to protest to Umpire Bucky Buscher that the shortstop was throwing the ball back to the mound when he dropped the ball.

At this point, Plate Umpire Lyles started out toward second to investigate the disturbance, when Chuck wheeled. He shouted at Lyles, "I'm arguing with the second base umpire. This is none of your business. Get back behind the plate where you belong." Lyles, speechless, could only reply by thumbing Chuck off the field.

Two down, one to go.

Little Dickie got into the game a few minutes later. G. W. had filled the bases when Granby Catcher Hank Foiles tried a pick-off throw to first. Brown, on third, then broke for the plate. The throw back from first got away from Foiles and Brown was safe.

Dickie, eager to help his heroes, leaped off the bench to back up Foiles. He picked up the ball and fired it to the receiver. Unfortunately for Dickie, though, Umpire Lyles didn' appreciate his good intentions.

The ump chased the youngest Stobbs off the bench and permitted a second G. W. runner to cross the plate.

Happy Slices 'The Ham' For Rickey

LEXINGTON, Ky., June 7 (U.P.).—Baseball Commissioner A. D. (Happy) Chandler said today that a visit from Branch Rickey, head of the Brooklyn Dodgers, at his Versailles, Ky., home was "purely social."

Chandler, who suspended Dodger Field Manager Leo Durocher, explained that Rickey and his wife were en route to Louisville to see St. Paul, Dodger farm club, play.

"They stayed for a couple of hours, had some Kentucky ham and went on to Louisville. No business of any kind was brought up," he said.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, June (AP).—Four United States golfers, including two-time runner-up Johnny Bulla, have entered the British Open Championship starting June 30, officials of the Professional Golf Association announced today.

North 'Stars' Win Lacrosse

Baltimore, Md., June 7 (U.P.).—The Northern all-star team swamped the Southern all-star group, 15-3, in the sixth annual intercollegiate lacrosse clash.

Henry Fish, star midfielder from Princeton, opened the scoring several minutes after the opening whistle and the North was never headed. Jim Hartinger, captain of this year's Army team, and Damon Jordon of RPI, the Nation's leading scorer this year, each tallied four times. Fish scored three goals.

The other Northern scores were by Percy Ransome of Princeton, Graham of Princeton, Mark Galloway of Colgate and Merte Gaina of Princeton. The South scorers were Brooke, Tunestall, Henley, Guild of Hopkins and Tommy Tongue of Washington and Lee.

The Northern aggregation was composed of standout players from Army, Princeton, RPI, Syracuse, Colgate, CCNY, MIT. The Southern squad was recruited from Hopkins, Navy, Drexel, Duke, Maryland, Washington and Lee and Loyola of Baltimore. Hank Foldberg, all-American football end from Army, was a key man in the North defense and his great play pleased the 5000 stick fans gathered at Homewood field in Baltimore.

Lane Snags Baltimore Stadium Plan

BALTIMORE, June 7 (AP).—Glenn L. Martin, aircraft manufacturer and chairman of Mayor D'Alesandro's stadium committee, said today Governor Lane had turned down a proposed memorial stadium to be built jointly by the State of Maryland and City of Baltimore before giving the plan a hearing.

"The Governor apparently has made up his mind before we even had a chance to talk with him," Martin said. "He appears to have decided against it simply from what he read in the papers."

Earlier the committee had recommended that the State be asked to add $2,500,000 to a $2,500,000 loan already available to the city for the construction of a stadium.

The Governor said he would not "undertake to speak for the Legislature," but that he knew of no fund from which money for the project could be appropriated.

—With CONSIDINE

NEW YORK, JUNE 7 (INS).—Here's a heart-touching little story that perhaps doesn't belong on the sports page but concerns a sports event, the Indianapolis Speedway race.

Several members of Mutual's broadcasting team at the race were having a drink at the Severn Hotel bar in Indianapolis when they noticed an attractive girl at the other end of the bar, by herself.

CONSIDINE

The girl wore a beautiful orchid, but was obviously alone. After a bit the boys walked over to her and politely inquired if she would have a drink with them.

"No, thanks," she smiled. "I'm having a tough time with this one."

"Mind if we have one with you?" one of the boys asked.

"Not at all," she said.

They did, and one commented on the beauty of her corsage. She reacted strangely at the mention of the orchid, said she guessed she'd have another drink after all, and then told them the story.

"I got one like this at last year's race, too," she said, quietly. "It had no card, and though I was puzzled I wore it to the race. Then, this time, the same thing happened. This orchid arrived, and again there was no card.

"SO I TRACKED down the florist and he told me I was lucky; that he had a paid-up order on hand to supply me with the best orchid in his shop each year at the race for ten years. I've got eight more to go."

She stopped and took a sip of her drink, and then went on.

"My husband and I used to come to this race," she said. "Big outing. He was crazy about racing cars. Used to write me from overseas, wishing the war would get over in a hurry and we could get back to Indianapolis together. He wrote me to be sure to go to the race, if they put one on before he could get back.

"I came last year by myself, and got a flower . . . and now this one . . ."

"Your husband sends the flowers?" one of the fellows asked.

"Yes," she answered. "He sent a money order to the florist, to cover deliveries for ten years. He sent it just before he was killed in action at Buna."

IF YOU'RE A HORSEPLAYER, or maintain a nodding acquaintance with a horse, you're missing a nugget of horselore if you don't pick up a copy of Dan Parker's "The ABC of Horse Racing" (Random House, $2.50).

The big, hard-hitting sports editor of the New York Daily Mirror does not attempt to tell you how to beat the races. In fact, he says the best advice is "do not try," and suggests that only those who "are prepared to lose and can afford to do so" engage in the adventure.

HE DOES, HOWEVER, list some extremely helpful "don'ts" which should enable more horseplayers to come away from tracks with at least car fare, and he offers a series of questions which the bettor-to-be might well ask himself while he is resisting the first shocking impulses sent out by the magnetized windows of the "sellers."

As a horseplayer hopelessly mired in that fool's paradise in which it would be possible for me to be touted on to one of Edgar Horn's ruptured routers in a race against Assault, I probably will ignore much of the sound counsel Dan hands out in his book.

Which is no criticism of the sensible, well-written track tract. Dan takes cognizance of such pathetic cases. He relates that he once exposed a vicious tout who promised suckers that he could fix a Saratoga race for a $1 fee.

He called the rogue every name he could print, and was stunned when he subsequently received a sack of mail, filled with greasy ones and deuces, and asking him to contact the man and fix a race for the letter writers.

Parker's early chapters on the history of racing in the United States, and the ever-amazing story of the origin of the thoroughbred are the best treatments I've read of topics which must have demanded enormous research.

THE SUREST WAY to snap a big league ball player out of a slump is to write a piece, several days in advance, saying the guy's in an abysmal slump. Then your blast appears in print the same day that other sections of the sports page are caroling the bloke for some great performance

But it seems safe to suggest that Bobby Feller, off his 1947 record, isn't the pitcher he was, and may never be again if he persists in trying to make more money than he could possibly retain. His post-season pitching, entrepreneuring and host of side interests appear to have taken something out of him.

As this is written, his record is six wins and five losses. He has completed only 6 of the 12 games in which he has appeared. Our favorite pitcher seems to have promoted himself beyond his endurance. In his quest for capital gains he is overlooking the one thing that makes all of his inside and outside income possible, his league pitching record.

To mix a metaphor thoroughly, Rapid Robert's numerous irons in the fire are causing him to lay an egg, and he could find in time that it isn't a golden one.

Worsham Leads 10 Area Golfers to U.S. Open

Play Starts Thursday at St. Louis

The three leaders in the National Capital Open, the fourth and final round of which is being played today at Prince Georges Country Club, will play in the United States Open tournament at St. Louis starting next Thursday, along with 10 golfers from the Washington, D. C., area.

Among the three leaders tied for third round honors at the Landover tourney with 203 is George Payton of Hampton, Va. Payton, in the open next Thursday, will play with John Krutilla of St. John, Ind., and Elroy Marti of Houston, Tex.

Other D. C. area qualifiers are Lew Worsham, with a 204 in the Prince Georges play, Sammy Snead, also with 204, Chandler Harper of Portsmouth, Va.; Walter A. Romans and Otto Greiner of Baltimore, Charles Bassler of Chevy Chase, Alfred L. Smith of Danville, Va., John O'Donnell of Norfolk, Va., and Buck Worsham of Bethesda, Md.

Locke Also in Play

The other two tied for first place in the nearby Maryland tourney are Bobby Locke of South Africa, currently the hottest professional golfer playing in the United States, and Lloyd Mangrum, winner of the United States Open last year. Both have been playing steady, consistent golf and will rate among the favorites for national honors in St. Louis.

Locke will play the first two rounds of his try for America's top golfing honor with Ted Bishop of Dedham, Mass., United States Amateur champion, recently returned from play in the British Amateur Championship, and Craig Wood, winner of the Open crown in 1941.

Worsham, Furgol Play

Lew Worsham, only one stroke off the Capital Open pace, will play with Ed Furgol, holder of the Prince Georges course record with a smashing 63 scored Friday, and Ed Held of St. Louis.

Otto Greiner, the Baltimore pro, will play with Johnny Palmer, Badin, N. C. pro, and Norman Norrid, Globe, Ariz., money player. Both men are only a few strokes off the hot pace of the Maryland play. Sammy Snead, who slumped from his torrid two-day earlier pace to go into second position, will play with Skee Riegel, Glendale, Calif., amateur, and Vic Ghezzi, playing out of Kansas City.

The field of 171 will shoot 18 holes Thursday and Friday with only the low 60s and ties competing in the 36-hole final Saturday. Par over the St. Louis Country Club layout is 71.

138 Entered In PGA Tourney

Detroit, June 7 (AP).—The Professional Golfers Association today announced the list of 138 entries in the twenty-ninth annual National P. G. A. Tournament at Plum Hollow Golf Club here June 18-24.

The contestants were divided into threesomes for 18-hole qualifying rounds the first two days of the meet, the stroke play to determine the 64 survivors for match play starting June 20.

For the qualifying rounds, defending P. G. A. Titlist Ben Hogan will take the course with Chick Harbert of suburban Northville and Dick Metz of Chicago at 12:13 p. m. (EST) June 18 and 9:37 a. m. June 19.

Washington, D. C., area qualifiers and who they will play are John O'Donnell of Norfolk, Va., with Phil Friel, Melrose, Mass., and Alve Hume, Lexington, Ky., 9:30 and 12:11; Jack Isaacs of Hampton, Va., with John Krutulla, St. John, Ind., and Bob Shave, Willoughby, Ohio., 12:18; Lew Worsham, Bethesda, Md., with Jim Ferrier, San Francisco and Mike Turnesa, White Plains, N. Y.

Walter Romans of Baltimore with Charles Farlow, Greensboro, N. C., and Paul Weiler, Norfolk, Nebr.; Chandler Harper of Portsmouth, Va., with Barney Clark, Los Angeles and Jimmy Milward, Madison, Wis.; Alfred Smith of Danville, Va., with Jerry Gianferante, Longmeadow, Mass., and Leland Gibson, Kansas City; Sammy Snead of Hot Springs, Va., with Herman Barron, White Plains, N. Y., and Sammy Byrd, Detroit.

over par, getting another bogey on seven. Payton used only 34 strokes, two under the card, and Vines matched that. Vines had an eagle on the par five fourth, chipping in from 70 feet for one of the most spectacular shots of the tournament.

Both Vines and Payton were on the fringe of the eighteenth with their second shots, some 50 feet away. Their first putts were both short and their seconds slipped by the cup. Snead canned an eight-footer for his birdie and 35, one under, for the side. Vines and Payton also had 35's.

Locke, playing with Thomson and Oliver, was Mr. Consistency himself. His putting was terrific and he has that, most of all, to thank for his 33-35—68. He climaxed his tour of the course by rapping in a 25-footer for a birdie three on the eighteenth. The knicker-clad South African was the man picked to win first money of $2000 in this $10,000 show and last night it looked as if he would probably do it.

Worsham's Putter Cool

Worsham, too, could have been the undisputed leader, but found no luck on the carpets. He three-putted the fourteenth and missed a six-footer for a birdie three and a 67 on the eighteenth. His third straight 68 was made up of a 33-35.

Two strokes behind the 204 shooters were Otto Greiner, of Baltimore, and Skip Alexander, of Lexington, N. C., Wright and Dick Metz were at 207, Gene Kunes, of Spring Haven, N. J., Johnny Palmer, of Badin, N. C., and Ed Furgol—the Pontiac, Mich., sharp shooter who had the 63 Friday, were at 208.

District Amateur Champion Bobby Brownell led the Simon pure contingent with a 70 yesterday for a 54-hole 209.

TEE TO GREEN: Walter Hagen, jr., kept up the family tradition of being late for a match. He showed up 10 minutes tardy at the first tee, but Wiffy Cox and Mel Shorey, his playing partners, didn't seem to mind, as they expected it from a Hagen. . . . If they paid off on consistency, Lew Worsham would be the winner with strokes to spare. He turned in his third consecutive 68 yesterday and also three-putted the fourteenth green for the third consecutive afternoon. . . . Ed Furgol, the fellow who had that blistering 63 Friday, fired three straight birdies on the first three holes to make it six birds in a row. He was one-under on the last three holes of his sensational round Friday. . . . Dutch Harrison, the drawling funster from Arkansas' razorback country, provided the noontime customers with a hilarious bit of repartee at the first tee. . . . The entire pro gang is lavish in its compliments for their advance man here, Spec Hammond. . . . Young Buck Worsham can't understand why his fellow pros, Brother Lew included, can't keep pace with Bobby Locke. "He isn't so much," Buck told Lew over the phone Friday night from Mamaroneck, N. Y. "I beat him in the Open qualifying last week." Buck had a 144, Locke 145.

and when the dust had cleared, Luke was on second and two Sox runs were home.

Murrell Jones followed with a triple to score Appling and the Sox were in front, 3-0.

They picked up a run in the next frame on singles by Don Kolloway, Mike Tresh, and Haynes who was pitching and hitting like he had a grudge against his father-in-law's boys.

Not that the third and fourth runs mattered, after Applings' ruinous double. Haynes was not having any trouble whatsoever.

Hits Well Scattered

He gave up a single to Priddy in the third, another to Grace in the fourth, the third one to Evans in the fifth an the final one-baser to Sherry Robertson in the seventh. The only other Nats to get on base were Mark Christman, who walked in the eighth, and Grace, who was safe on Kolloway's boot in the ninth.

It wasn't much to cheer about and less to write home about.

Tomorrow's double header will be Luke Appling day, honoring the personable White Sox veteran of 17 years with the same club, who is one of the best-liked men in baseball . . . Sherry Robertson was batting against his brother-in-law when Joe Haynes came in to take over in the second inning for the ailing Johnny Rigney . . . Walter Masterson, originally scheduled to pitch today, and Chick Pieretti will try their hurling luck tomorrow as the Nats make two efforts to break the jinx held over them by the pesky Chisox. Bob Gillespie and Frank Papish will try to make it nine in a row over the Nats for the South Siders.

Giants Swap Young to Reds For Beggs; Other Deals on Tap

New York, June 7 (AP).—The power-laden New York Giants, seeking pitching strength to make their surprise bid for the National League pennant more effective, today traded hard-hitting Babe Young to the Cincinnati Reds for veteran righthander Joe Beggs amid reports that another hot deal for hurling help was on the fire.

The Young-Beggs trade was an even swap with the Giants giving up a player who didn't fit in the picture for urgently needed hurling support. The Reds, on the other hand, are almost certain to get the long distance hitting they have been looking for in Babe Young's big bat. The native New Yorker batted in more than 100 runs in each of his first two seasons as regular first sacker of the Giants, just before he was sidelined for slugging Johnny Mize, obtained from the St. Louis Cardinals.

Before the trade was confirmed, the deal was reported to the Associated Press by a reliable source who also said that the Giants were trying to trade the one-time brilliant Bill Voiselle to the Philadelphia Phils for righthander Tommy Hughes and southpaw Oscar Judd.

Phils Deny Report

The Phils denied the report, with General Manager Herb Pennock declaring today there was "nothing to it." But, whether the Phils get him or some other club, Voiselle seems definitely headed for another outfit before the June 15 trading deadline.

Voiselle, off to a splendid start in his 1944 freshman year when he won 21 games and lost 16, dropped to 14 victories in 1945 and nine last year. This season he has won one game and lost four. In recent days, he has been appearing only in relief roles.

Judd was rated as the star of the Phillies' staff last year when he won 11 and lost 12 and was the only pitcher to whip the World Champion St. Louis Cardinals four times. Plagued by a sore arm on and off in recent years, the Canadian-born 38-year-old hurler has lost five games without a win this season.

Hughes, 26, a star pitcher for the Phils before the war, has been ineffective since his discharge from the Army last year and has dropped six decisions without a victory thus far. Tommy was once, thought so well of by the Giants that Horace Stoneham, president, offered $100,000 for his services in 1942 when he won 12 games for a tail-end team.

Gallant Winner After Running Second in Race Friday

Bit of Nerve Beaten by Two Lengths

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., June 7.—They named him Gallant, this eight-year-old son of Gallant Sir and Dominate. He proved worthy of the name today when he dominated the stretch running in the Middletown purse, featuring the program at this turf point.

The veteran gelding not only won today by two lengths but he turned in the sparkling effort after running second yesterday. Carrying the colors of Mrs. R. D. Boyd, Gallant came in to the wire ahead of J. H. Vanwert's Bit of Nerve with S. H. Hall's Tintrel in third position in a field of seven.

Gallant was ridden by Apprentice Jimmy Baird and had only a lukewarm backing in a crowd of 6500. He paid a $9.40 mutuel. Today's track was heavy as the result of downpours here this morning. Gallant was clocked in 1:27 4/5 for the six and one-half furlongs.

Bit of Nerve went away from the gate as if he were going to steal the main portion of the purse. Tintrel was second and Bold Boy third as the field went into the clubhouse turn with Gallant being rated in fifth position.

Along the backstretch, Tintrel and Bold Boy made attempts to dislodge Bit of Nerve but weakened. However, Gallant, placed to a drive and kept in the center of the track in the better going, answered Baird's urging and wore down Bit of Nerve to win going away.

The daily double paid a healthy $364 to a small group of lucky ticket holders. The big part of the pay-off was the result of a surprising but well-earned victory by the M and R Stable's Dr. R. Young, an $80.80 shot that got up in the last jump under the handling of Jockey Danny Scocca, a Washington boy. A. J. Poinsett's Cabin Creek, paying $6.80 made a parade of the second race under the riding of Apprentice Pat O'Brien.

The easiest victory of the day came when Mrs. H. R. Miller's Quent Reynolds led every jump of the way and got home 12 lengths in advance of the closest opposition in the fourth race. Jockey Emil Carrillo did the riding. Mrs. L. A. Whiteley's Scotty's Own was second with Martin and Early's Gradatim third. Quent Reynolds paid $11.40.

Rippey Wins Carter 'Cap at Aqueduct

Ridden by Ovie Scurlock, Rippey covered the distance in 1:23 and returned $13.90, $6 and $3.80 while capturing first money of $19,750.

Gallorette, carrying 123 pounds compared to Rippey's 112, finished three lengths behind Inroc. The latter paid $5.50 and $3.50 while Gallorette returned $2.80 to show.

Hal Price Headley's Pellicle was fourth, and Tidy Bid, running with the winner as a Helis entry, finished fifth, with C. T. Cherney's Hornbeam, C. V. Whitney's Recce and J. W. Brown's Brown Mogul completing the field in that order.

Braves Buy Shoun

Boston, June 7 (AP).—Purchase by the Boston Braves in the National League of left-handed hurler Clyde Shoun of the Cincinnati Reds was announced today by General Manager John Quinn. Shoun, 32, has a major league record of 62 wins and 54 defeats in his career with the Reds, the Cardinals and the Cubs.

Police Boys Track Set

The annual track and field meet of the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club will take place next Saturday at Central High School's Stadium, Sergt. Forrest L. Binswanger, director, announced yesterday.

Hundreds of participants from Clubs Nos. 4, 5, 10, 11 and 12 will compete in the event. The Police Boys' Club band under Major Leon Brustloff will furnish music and will join the contestants in opening the competition with a grand parade around the field.

The meet will be conducted under regular A. A. U. rules, with each boy permitted to enter only two running events and one field event or one running and two field events.

There will be competition in the junior class for youngsters who did not reach their 16th birthday before June 1; senior class for boys 16-18 and high school class for boys 18 and up.

All boys will be weighed in at their respective clubs this Wednesday and Thursday. Entries will close Thursday night.

Gold, silver and bronze medals will be awarded winners in individual events, with gold medals to the first team in the relay races. Gold track shoes will go to the top junior and senior winners.

Hempley Joins Colts

Baltimore, June 7 (AP).—The Baltimore Colts of the All-America Pro Football League today announced the signing of end Gus Hempley, a University of South Carolina product, and halfback Johnny Itzel, who got into the play-for-pay business by way of Georgetown and Pitt.

Soldier Started It

State Department Selling U. S. To World Through Sports

SPORTS are being used by the State Department as a medium of showing the American way of life to peoples of far-away lands.

State Department officials told The Post yesterday that stories, pictures, mats, movies, microfilm, and publications on football, baseball, basketball, auto racing and other sports subjects are making a big hit abroad.

American soldiers aroused interest in our sports wherever they went during the war, and now that interest is being nurtured by the State Department's Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs (OIC).

Babe Ruth Day and the Soap Box Derby recently were given widespread attention in foreign countries, showing the attention given to American youngsters in developing ingenuity and sportsmanship.

Warsaw, Poland, recently requested that a 3000-word story be cabled on professional sports in America. Prague, Budapest and Sofia are Balkan cities where interest is high in our games.

Sao Paulo, Brazil, recently requested baseball films with "English sound tracks, photographs of players and baseball parks as well as feature articles."

There is a large Japanese colony in southern Brazil, and Sao Paulo alone has 800 Japanese baseball teams.

In many other countries around the globe, sports stories are never objectionable, even in areas where press restrictions are enforced.

Greeks Seek Aid in Sports

The White House has promised to send some athletic equipment to Greece, Stylianos Kyriakidis, Greek runner who captured the 1946 Boston marathon, said yesterday.

Kyriakidis has been authorized by the Greek Committee for Olympic Games to conduct a campaign to raise $50,000 in this country. He also is accepting whatever equipment Americans can spare.

At the White House, Kyriakidis said he received promises from military and naval aides to "send some used equipment" to the Greeks.

"We have nothing, not even sweat shirts, with which to start training for the 1948 Olympic Games in London," Kyriakidis said. "And to think that Greece is the mother of the Olympics."

Kyriakidis said that contributions and equipment to help the Greeks will be accepted by the Greek Consul General, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City.

Golf Writers Name Whittlesey Director

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—Organization of the Golf Writers Association of America today was completed with selection of 14 directors representing publications from coast to coast.

Newly appointed directors, it was announced by Charles Bartlett of the Chicago Tribune, secretary-treasurer, include Merrill Whittlesey, Washington Star; Grantland Rice, North American Newspaper Alliance; Herb Graffis, Golfing and Goldom Magazine; Charles Curtis, Los Angeles Times; John Dietrich, Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Tom Fitzgerald, Boston Globe; Amos Melton, Fort Worth, Tex., Star-Telegram; Des Sullivan, Newark, N. J., Evening News; Leonard Cahn, Rocky Mountain News; Fred Byrod, Philadelphia Inquirer; Billy Sixty, Milwaukee Journal; Tom Siler, Chicago Sun; W. F. Steedman, Seattle Times, and W. W. Edgar, Detroit Free Press.

Feathers Signs New Contract at N. C. State

Raleigh, N. C., June 7 (AP).—Beattie Feathers, former Tennessee All-American who, in 1946 piloted North Carolina State College to its most successful grid season in 20 years, today was signed to a new three-year contract as head football coach. The Wolfpack last year won seven of nine regular season jousts before bowing to Oklahoma in Jacksonville's Gator Bowl game.

St. John Names Joe Gallagher

Joe Gallagher, former George Washington University basketball star, yesterday was named head football, baseball and basketball coach at St. John's, his high school alma mater.

Gallagher succeeds Gene Augusterfer, who has been moved upstairs to the head football coaching post at Catholic University.

Gallagher's football assistants will be Alphonse (Tuffy) Leemans, and Ray Hanken, both former George Washington football greats who later attained stardom with the New York professional Giants. Leemans will serve as backfield coach, and Hankens as line aide.

Ray Fenlon, youngest of seven brothers, who achieved stardom on District athletic fields, was appointed coach of the St. John's junior varsity. Fenlon also performed at G. W. U.

Gallagher served as basketball, football and baseball coaching assistant last year.

Augusterfer's appointment at Catholic U. is effective on September 1.

Pirates Release McLish

Pittsburgh, June 7 (AP).—Calvin Coolidge (Cal) McLish, 21-year-old right-handed flinger, obtained by the Pittsburgh Pirates in a deal with Brooklyn, has been released under option to Albany of the Eastern League. McLish pitched only one inning for the Pirates and took part in one game for the Dodgers last year after being discharged from the armed forces.

Bartzen, Larned Gain Net Finals

Gardner Larned and Bernard Bartzen, the first and second seeded players in the Northern Virginia Invitation Tennis Tournament, advanced to the finals yesterday by downing Washington's last two hopefuls at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Larned, ranked thirteenth in the Nation last year, drubbed Hugh Lynch, 6—2, 6—1, while Bartzen had little trouble taking Jim Thackara in straight sets, 6—1, 6—3.

Following their singles triumphs, Larned and Bartzen teamed up to win their semifinal doubles match against Jim Farrin and Bob Smith, 6—1, 6—3.

Dr. Johnson Wins

In the other doubles match, Dr. Dave Johnsen and Donald Leavens advanced to the finals by outlasting Hugh Lynch and Kahl Spriggs, 6—4, 6—3, 7—5.

Washington Women's champion, Ann Gray, downed Willie Herbert, 6—0, 6—4, to move into the final round along with Charlotte Decker, who beat Sara Moore, 6—1, 6—1. This puts last year's City of Washington finalists together again.

The Misses Gray and Decker also entered the finals in the mixed doubles. Miss Gray and Farrin defeated Lynch-Lynch, 6—3, 6—2; while Miss Decker and Phil Neff edged Leavens and Elizabeth Prince, 6—3, 9—7.

Finals Today

Today's finals will begin at 12:30 p. m., with the women's singles event opening the program. Miss Gray will again be favored to defeat Miss Decker, although if the latter takes advantage of her forcing tactics, she may turn the tables.

The men's singles championship will take place at 1:30 p. m., with Larned slightly favored to take the measure of Bartzen. Both are experienced, if youthful campaigners, and an excellent final is in prospect.

At 3:30 p. m., Larned and Bartzen will face Johnsen and Leavens for the doubles title, with Larned and Bartzen heavily favored over the Washington pair.

The mixed doubles final between Decker and Farrin and Gray-Neff will close today's play. The match is slated for 5:30 p. m. and looms as a toss-up.

Mulloy Gains Tennis Final

Kansas City, June 8 (AP).—Gardnar Mulloy of Coral Gables, Fla., advanced to the finals of the men's singles play in the Heart of America Tennis Tournament today as his opponent, colorful little Francisco Segura, Ecuador, conceded the match after dropping the first game of the fifth set.

Mulloy, fifth ranking United States amateur, won by the score of 5—7, 6—2, 6—3, 9—7, 1—0.

Segura, who blew the match point in the fourth set, explained that he was overcome by the heat and couldn't continue after Mulloy had turned on a blazing attack for a 1-love advantage in the fifth.

Playing in humid 90-degree weather, both boys were completely exhausted when the match ended.

Mulloy will clash with top-seeded Frank Parker, Los Angeles, for the men's singles crown tomorrow. Parker defeated his hometown rival, Bob Falkenberg, 6—1, 6—3, 6—2.

Laura Lou Jahn, the 14-year-old miss from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., won her girls' singles championship match with Doris Jensen of Des Moines, Iowa, first seeded women's player, 6—2, 7—5.

Miss Jahn will meet Mrs. Baba Lewis, Boston, for the women's singles title tomorrow.

Grays Meet Eagles Here Twice Today

The Washington Grays, now three games in the rear of the league leading Newark Eagles, will try to whittle the margin down to one game, this afternoon at Griffith Stadium.

The Grays meet the Eagles in a doubleheader.

Last Sunday, the Grays beat the Eagles in an eleven inning thriller 3-2. However, since beating the Eagles in Sunday's tilt the Grays have dropped three out of four ball games.

The Eagles are paced by second baseman Larry Doby, who at the last official Negro National League statistics, is batting a remarkable .508. In 16 games, the figures disclosed, Doby obtained 32 hits out of 63 appearances at bat, 10 of his blows being good for home runs.

The Grays have four regulars batting over the .300 mark. Luis Marquez, utility infielder, is whaling the horsehide at a .377 pace, while Luke Easter is batting .318 with six home runs. Sammy Bankhead and Pep Young are also hitting over the .300 mark.

The Grays manager, Vic Harris, is expected to start Johnny Wright (4-1) and Gene Smith (4-1) against the high flying Eagles. Max Manning (3-0) and Lem Hooker (5-3) are expected to hurl for the Eagles.

Heurich Leads Post League

Replaying of three games that were rained out earlier in the season will wind up the first half of The Washington Post-Industrial League this week.

Two games involve the first-place Heurich Brewers, who are unbeaten in six games. A victory for the Brewers in either game will give Heurich the first half title.

Coolidge Wins Archery Title

Coolidge gained permanent possession of the Dr. E. P. Clark plaque yesterday by winning the interhigh archery competition for the third successive time at Rock Creek Park.

Coolidge scored 1520 points and Alice Deal Junior High School finished second with 1498 points. Central was third with 1371 and Western fourth with 965.

Bob Speidel of Coolidge was the individual leader with 70 hits good for 456 points. Marvin Schoaf of Coolidge won the gold elimination.

Three Local Boxers Feature Fight Card Tomorrow Night

Four boxers who fought in the armed forces for America and Canada will provide two 10-round attractions tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium on the second outdoor show for the Turner-Menendez combine.

They are Joltin' Joe Gannon, Ken Stribling, Jackie Cranford, all of Washington, and Jimmy Lake (not the announcer), of Montreal.

Gannon and Stribling, middleweights, will clash in the feature match, while the added attraction involves the heavyweights, Cranford and Lake, a newcomer to these parts.

Both Cannon and Stribling, since returning from overseas duty after serving with the Army in the European theater, have good records, and will be battling for a crack at Bee Bee Washington, the Foggy Bottom battler, and an eventual match with Smuggy Hursey.

Stribling a few months ago supplied the season's No. 1 upset at Turner's Arena by belting out Frank Sweeney, another former G. I., in three heats. The same Sweeney was decisioned by Gannon two years ago at the Ball Park before he sailed overseas.

In his career as pro and amateur Gannon has lost but one bout out of more than 60.

Cranford is out to clinch a big match here in September, but the big blonde, who never lost a local bout since his return from the Coast Guard, meets a potent hitter in Lake, who was a hero with the Royal Canadian Air Forces.

Federal Golf Medal Play Starts Monday

The annual Medal Play Tournament of the Federal Golf Association will take place Monday and Tuesday, June 16 and 17 at the Prince Georges Country Club.

The 15 low gross scores will compete in an additional 18 holes on Thursday, June 19 for the individual Federal Golf championship.

These Five DeAtley Brothers Are Always Up to Something

By Roger Wolbarst
Post Reporter

READERS of Washington's sports pages have seen the name De Atley many times, and there's a good reason for it.

Any outstanding athlete gets his name in print, but when five star athletes bearing the same monicker come along, it's a good bet that at least one is mentioned almost every day.

Starting with 7-year-old Buddy De Atley, who plays baseball with the Police Boys Club, and basketball with the Fairweather Elementary School team, the brothers range through Don, 11; Robert, 13; and Jiggs, 17, up to Merle, 22.

Don plays basketball and baseball for the Nye House; captains the Amidon School baseball team, and is quarterback on the Police Boys Club football team. In addition Don is one of the best junior track men in the city.

Bob takes part in basketball at the Barney Neighborhood House, plays softball with Jefferson, and stars in basketball and football for the Police Boys Club.

Jiggs, to hold up his end, is on the Nye House handball team, the Police Boys Club basketball and baseball squads, and plays softball with the Westminster Club in the Recreation Department League.

The oldest brother, Merle, is on Feary's ball team in the Southwest Community League, the Jefferson basketball team in the Reo league, and the Police Boys Club No. 4 football team.

All of which keeps the De Atley boys pretty busy the year round.

DUE TO THE large number of boys requesting admission to the Merrick Boys Club, applications will not be taken until after June 15. Three hundred and eighty new boys have already been accepted this year. Applications for membership should be mailed to James Mulvihill, 611 C st. ne., after the above date.

The Cleveland Park Sluggers have two ball teams, each of which is seeking games. One team is 7-8 years of age, and the other is 9-10. Teams interested contact Larry Conant at WOodley 2952.

The Boys Club of Washington will sponsor a free summer Learn to Swim Campaign, beginning June 23. The course will be held at the Eastern Branch pool. Boys between 8 and 18 are invited to attend the classes, which will be under the direction of Red Cross swimming instructors. Registration for the course will be accepted up to June 13 at the club, 261 17th st. se.

Carl King was named the outstanding boy at Georgetown Branch of the Boys Club at the award banquet at the Continental Hotel. Carl played third base on the Insect baseball team, left tackle on the 140-pound football team, and center on the 135-pound basketball quintet.

Four boys were named outstanding in various sports: Don Kokes, baseball; Charley Workman, boxing; Harvey Steele, football, and Bob McLindon, basketball.

Irish-Hoya Game Seen Here in '49

CHICAGO, June 7.—Do not be surprised if Notre Dame and Georgetown got together in football in the next year or two. Talk here is that the Irish will come to Griffith Stadium in 1949 in the beginning of a series between the two Catholic schools . . . The rumor, which is strong enough to be a report, may be well founded as it is a known fact Notre Dame is anxious to schedule new opponents, what with Army winding up its traditional game after this fall and Big Nine teams presenting frigid shoulders to Irish advances . . . Also is the fact that Notre Dame Coach Frank Leahy has always retained a soft spot in his heart for Georgetown, where he first entered the coaching ranks back in 1930 as Hoya line coach under the late Tommy Mills. Could be, and very possibly.

CHICAGO police are on the watch for a gang of hoodlums who have been molesting White Sox night-game customers . . . Latest victim was Roger Griffith, 14-year-old youngster, and the brother of Mrs. Bobo Newsom . . . Roger and a pal, Tom Brown, 15, came up to Chicago from their Gary, Ind., home town and were attacked last night by 8 or 10 bigger youths and relieved of $5. Young Griffith had to go to a hospital to have three stitches taken in a cut on the inside of the eyelid . . . Both youngsters insisted on coming to the game after being treated, but missed the first five innings . . . Mrs. Bobo, Kay to her pals, is no relation to Clark Griffith despite having the same maiden name as that of the Nat prexy.

ASIDE to Promoter Goldie (Liberty A. C.) Ahearn and Matchmaker Gabe (Turner's Arena) Menendez: "Last night a fight card was held here featuring three 10-rounders with such "Name" scrappers as Gene Burton, Johnny Bratton, Bob Foxworth, Johnny Colan, Anton Raadik and Al Hostak. It drew more than $62,000 in Chicago Stadium, where the Tony Zale-Rocky Graziano fight will be held. And the top ringside price wasn't $10 by a jugfull. It was $6.50 . . . Compare that to the $10 top charged for the Smuggy Hursey-Aaron Perry and Hursey-Bee Bee Washington scraps and it looks like Washington is a pretty good fight town after all to pay that kind of money for two strictly local boys who are hardly known outside of their own home town . . . Chicago sports writers were almost willing to bet Manager Ted Lyons wouldn't show up at least once in the last couple of days, so severe is his cold.

FRED MANDEL, owner of the Detroit Lions of the National Football League and who operates one of the country's largest department stores here in Chicago, would have liked to have sold his Lions and bought the Chicago Cardinal franchise following the untimely death last April of the Card owner, the late Charley Bidwill . . . And Billy, in trust, would not permit the club to be sold . . . Charley, jr., incidentally, is a student at Georgetown University. Billy Bidwell, in high school, also is reported headed for G. U. . . .

'Minstrel' Fourth in Slow Race

By Bill Macklin

Epsom Downs, England, June 7 (AP).—The Derby distance and Gordon Richards' old Derby hoodoo caught up with Britain's "horse of the century"—Tudor Minstrel— in the 168th running of England's ancient classic today and he staggered home a faltering fourth, as a 40 to 1 French outside shot surged out of nowhere to win.

Route-going Pearl Diver, foaled during the war in occupied France and given an alias to hide his identity from the Germans—and unheralded and practically unheard of before today—set the stretch afire in the final quarter-mile to roll in by four lengths to the astonishment of close to half-a-million folks, including the royal family, who turned out for the traditional Derby Day in spite of morning rain.

No one was more astonished, however, than his owner, the young French banker, Baron Geoffrey de Waldner, when the Diver unwrapped his surprise package at the Downs. The overjoyed owner admitted later he "didn't think Pearl Diver could beat Tudor Minstrel." As a result, he split his 100-pound bet on his colt to win and place.

Choice of Many

Practically everyone had been conceding Tudor Minstrel the $38,604 winner's paycheck, and had wondered why any of the others in the field of 15 even bothered to show up. But the Minstrel Man just didn't have the gas in his tank for the mile-and-a-half of "ups-and-downs," the tough, horseshoe-shaped course that starts uphill, runs downhill around its lone bend, and then rises again along the straightaway home. He got to the front rounding the turn, but that was all the mileage he could get.

He came home a-wearying back of Pearl Diver and the Aga Khan's Migoli and the Maharaja of Baroda's record $117,600 yearling, Sayajirao, who was second choice in the betting, in that order.

It stunned the thousands who had backed him down to 4 to 7, shortest priced chalk-horse in more than a decade of derbies. It shocked owner John A. Dewar, the distiller, like a shortage of grain for making Scotch never would.

And it handed Jockey Richards the heart-breaker of his career. For, 43-year-old Gordon has won more races than any other race-rider who ever lived—nearly 3,300—but he has never come home in the big one, the derby. This was his twenty-second try.

Slowest Time in Years

It took Pearl Diver 2.32 2-5 to negotiate the mile-and-a-half grind, making it the slowest derby since another French router, Bois Roussel, was clocked in 2:39 1-5 back in 1938. And it was far off the record of 2:33 4-5 chalked up by the mighty Mahmoud in 1936, before Sonny Whitney of the New York Whitneys bought him for $84,000 from the Aga Khan and took him to a stud career in America.

Touchdown Club Holds 4th Outing

The fourth annual outing of the Touchdown Club is scheduled for the Manor Country Club Thursday when a day long program of entertainment and sports is offered.

Climaxing the annual frolic will be the golf tournament which was won a year ago by Harry G. Pitt.

Horseshoe pitching; a 40-yard foot race; a softball game between the club's men and non-letter men and various other pastimes will round out the activity which will be terminated by a big dinner.

75-Year-Old Dad Put Up for 'Ideal' Title

An outstanding entry in The Post's contest to pick the "ideal father" of 1947 is a 75-year-old dad with "hair just like spun silk . . . eyes like the blue in the sky and a smile like heavenly sunshine."

His qualifications for the title "ideal father" were submitted yesterday by one of his seven children. He works 12 hours daily, teaches a Sunday school class, and each night from work he telephones his wife of 54 years, the entry states.

Another "oldster" nominated spends every evening at his invalid wife's bedside.

"I think that my dad deserves the honor of "ideal father" because he has always forgone his own pleasure for the sake of my mother and us children," the entry declares. This dad became both "father and mother" to his family of 12 children after his wife's illness.

The time is growing short in which you can nominate your dad for the title of "ideal father." On Father's Day, next Sunday, the winning dad will reap the honors he so justly deserves.

With his family he will be The Post's guest for dinner and a show, will broadcast over Station WINX and will be presented a plaque.

To enter your dad, write down what you like most about him and send the letter to the Ideal Father Editor, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C. Deadline for entries is Wednesday, and letters should be postmarked midnight Tuesday. The winner will be announced Friday.

2 Baby Girls Found Slain

Massillon, Ohio, June 7 (AP).—A killer stole into the third-floor nursery of City Hospital, battered to death the two baby girls he found there and escaped without leaving a clew to his identity or motive, police said today.

No weapon was found. The dying babies were discovered beside their cribs last night. It could be theorized that their heads were struck against the fall, said Police Chief Stanley W. Switter.

The victims were Diane J. Brand, 8 weeks old, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Brand, and Rosemary Morton, 9 weeks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Morton.

Traffic Safety Credit Given Newspapers

Memphis, Tenn., June 7 (AP).—Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, general chairman of the President's conference on highway safety, told the Tennessee Press Association today that newspaper reporting of traffic accidents is an important contribution to safe driving.

Fleming said last year's highway safety campaign reduced by 6000 the number of persons who would have been killed had the high fatality rates of the first six months of 1946 continued.

"I think the newspapers deserve a large share of the credit," Fleming asserted.

"The press has never failed to support the cause of traffic safety, nor has it ever hesitated to make any contribution asked of it."

Traffic laws are ineffective unless they are enforced rigidly and impartially, Fleming said, and "the press owes a responsibility to its readers to report fully and accurately the manner in which the enforcement job is done.

"Accurate, thoroughgoing reporting will very quickly reveal what policemen and what courts are conscientiously trying to protect human life and if correction is needed, the people can be depended upon to apply it at the next election."

Bigger Factory Output Urged To Aid Farmer

By John W. Ball

Any successful national farm program must have teamwork from industry and labor, as well as from the farmers, Congress was told yesterday.

Before an almost full membership of the House Agriculture Committee, Chester C. Davis, president of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank, and former administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment program, outlined the problems confronting agriculture as seen by the research and policy committee of the Committee for Economic Development.

Davis' appearance was part of the study by the House Committee leading toward a long-time program for agriculture. The witness furnished no specific recommendations.

Steady Factory Output Vital

If he could be granted "one wish for the growth and prosperity of agriculture," Davis said, it would be:

"Let the nonagricultural industries and labor find the way to keep working at full efficiency and capacity turning out goods and services that can be absorbed in a high standard of living—in better homes, equipment, electrification, refrigeration, sanitation, clothing, ad infinitum.

"With steady work and efficient production, prices could go down without cutting profits or wages.

"Real wages would increase, for the laborer is like the farmer, it isn't the number of dollars but what he can buy with his product or his labor that counts.

"Under such conditions, the farmer could produce abundantly and still trade on good terms for what the other man makes: he could prosper at lower price levels. I think that really is the way out."

Record Wheat Crops Unwise

Davis declared he believed that no program is possible which will make it profitable for this country to continue to produce "a billion bushels of wheat a year for human food."

The basic troubles of agriculture, Davis said, are:

1. Surplus labor resources. Measured by "cold economic standards," he said, "the excess of human resources engaged in agriculture is probably the most important single factor in the problem of per capita farm income."

Another element, he said, "is the improvement in the output capacity of farm workers. Agriculture is in the midst of a technical revolution, the counterpart of the technological advance in industry."

2. The increase of markets available to the American farmer is dropping rapidly. "The rate of population increase moved upward during the war," Davis said, "but this is not expected to continue. It is a phenomenon that has occurred during and after other wars."

Farm Income Fluctuates Most

3. Instability of income due to business fluctuations. "Whenever business has boomed, net farm income has risen fully twice as fast as nonfarm income," he said. "When business declined, the net income from farming has always fallen more sharply and further than nonfarm income.

"Maintaining a stable farm income," he emphasized, "may be impossible if we do not learn how to keep industry from the production extremes that are its past history."

4. Farmers have suffered from wide shifts in the general price level, he asserted.

"Farmers who are in debt are particularly vulnerable," he said. "Since most farmers are self-employed, many carry comparatively large capital debts.

"The search for ways to promote price level stability deserves high rating in any agricultural program."

5. The fact that the "see-sawing of total farm income is caused primarily by price changes, not by changes in volume of farm output, has led farmers to insist on efforts to stabilize farm product prices," Davis said.

At this point the witness called for a new base for determining parity prices.

"Parity appeals to the public as fair and just," he said.

"But as a legal instrument to fix farm product prices, parity based on relationship that existed 30 years ago has become a liability. The Research Committee has concluded that a redefinition is overdue."

There are three ways to hold the exchange value of the farm output high, or to increase it, he said, listing them as:

(1) Cutting down the volume of farm production.

(2) Increasing the effective demand.

(3) Increasing the quality of goods and services produced by the nonagricultural group.

"Most of us favor the second and third ways as being better for the country, better for the farmers, and better for the world," he said.

Former Wacs Hold Reunion at Bolling Field

More than 100 former members of the Wac who served at Bolling Field during the war held a reunion at the Noncommissioned Officers Club on the field last night.

Seventeen States were represented at the dinner and dance. Prize for the girl coming the longest distance going to Miss Myrtle Alt of Great Falls, Mont.

Col. Mary A. Halloran, commanding officer of the Wac, and Maj. Frances S. Cornick, Wac air staff director, were honored guests at the dinner, at which Miss Dorothy Stavely, Palmyra, N. J., presided. Capt. Kathreen Thompson, present commanding officer of the Wac squadron at Bolling Field, and other present and former officers were also present.

Following the dinner members of the Noncommissioned Officers Club honored the visiting former Wacs with a dance.

Dope Control Ineffective In Germany

By International News Service

The Federal Narcotics Bureau reported yesterday that narcotics control in Germany is "unsatisfactory," but that United States military authorities in Japan have adopted enforcement measures similar to those in the United States.

In the 1946 annual report on the "traffic in opium," the Narcotics Bureau reported that enforcement of drug laws in the American occupation zone in Korea is "not too effective" due to lack of experience of the Korean police.

The report for the first time acknowledged concrete hope of restricting the cultivation of the opium poppy—source of morphine—to scientific needs.

Bound for Black Market

In its findings on Germany, the report stated:

"There are indications that large quantities of narcotics scattered by bombings and left behind by retreating German armies are in the hands of unauthorized individuals at the present time and will eventually reach the black market.

"The reestablishment of the inspection system has revealed an increase in the number of addicts, particularly among professional people."

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations adopted a resolution requesting Britain, Russia, France and the United States "to take the necessary measures, at the earliest possible moment, for the reestablishment of an effective control of narcotics for all Germany."

The report noted that information secured since the occupation of Japan reveals that Japan permitted "the most flagrant violations . . . of national drug laws and international drug treaties" in the years prior to the second World War.

Treaty Wilfully Violated

The report disclosed that in 1937 and 1938 "the Japanese government wilfully violated its treaty obligations. It has been definitely established from a survey of the production records of the drug factories and interviews with officials that the Japanese government knowingly submitted to the permanent central opium board false and fraudulent reports, grossly understanding and thereby concealing their actual production of narcotic drugs, particularly heroin."

One Japanese official admitted the falsification, and said it was done "to save the face of Japan." The report stated he was removed from office by the Japanese government at the direction of the military government.

The bureau disclosed that it has placed "demerol," a synthetic morphine substitute, on its list of "drugs of addiction."

Doctors Organize To Help Junior Corps Get Funds

A doctors' committee, headed by Dr. T. Edward Jones, has been organized and has pledged a minimum subscription of $1000, in behalf of the Junior Police and Citizens' Corps, now completing the second week of its campaign to raise $25,000.

Dr. Jones, formerly head of Freedmen's Hospital, has selected the following team members, all physicians:

Joseph Dodson, Joseph E. Trigg, William F. Nelson, Claude P. Carmichael, B. A. Gray, James E. Walker, E. C. Mazique, George W. Adams, Jesse A. Keene and C. H. Marshall.

G. Howland Shaw is president of the corps with headquarters at 720 Bargain pl. nw.

ONE OF THE LARGEST UNDERTAKERS IN THE WORLD

A funeral as low as $95. Other funerals from $95 to $2000.

Since you asked me, I'd say:

"Keep buying the weekly pass"

Good advice! The officer sees how often folks board a Capital Transit street car or bus—to save a few minutes, when a shower comes up, or because they're fagged out.

Transit travel is so big a bargain in this city you can well USE MORE OF IT, not less.

With a $1.50 weekly pass, you ride all you want—anywhere, any time. No transfer bother or fishing for change. Any member of the family can use it. And on Sundays and legal holidays two youngsters under 12 may ride with you FOR FREE.

So—why limit your rides? Better use the weekly pass—and treat yourself to MORE RIDES!

'And a Little Child Shall Lead Them'

This Is Children's Day In Capital Churches

By Marjorie Binford Woods

MOTHER has had her day, Dad will celebrate next Sunday. But what about Children's Day?

No annual day has ever been nationally proclaimed for paying honor to our moppets. But thanks to the churches throughout the country Young America is not forgotten.

For nearly a hundred years most Protestant churches have observed Children's Day services in America on the second Sunday in June. Originally called Rose Sunday at its inception in the Universalist Church of the Redeemer in Chelsea, Mass. (1856), the custom has its roots in the old world. May Day in ancient Roman and Lutheran churches was the day on which children in processionals carried flowers to confirmation services. The change from May Day to June in the United States was made to conform with our most reliable flowering season.

Called Flower Day

Through observance here after a few years, Rose Day (or Flower Day as it was sometimes called) came to be known as Children's Day. The Methodist Episcopal Church was the first denomination formally to recognize the day in 1868.

Today in Washington, and for the next two June Sundays to come, many churches will spotlight the fledglings. Dressed in their Sunday best, with faces shining, the youngsters will speak their pieces and lisp lilting songs while the grown-ups sit back and applaud.

Seeing these citizens of tomorrow in their own miniature chapels, where services are held regularly especially for them—one recognizes the significance of the Biblical phrase "a little child shall lead them."

At home in their own domain of scaled-down furnishings and a service charted to their own understanding, they respond eagerly, participating in Scripture reading, singing, collection service and listen unsquirmingly to the colorful Bible story.

Typical Child's Chapel

Typical of services to be held on Children's Day in many churches here is that of the Children's Church at the Church of the Reformation, scheduled for next Sunday. Ordinarily held in the Children's Chapel during the adult's church hour, the site of the ceremony will be moved to the large sanctuary in order that parents and friends may observe modern methods in religious education for children.

Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor, and "Sister" Pearle Lyerly, deaconess in charge of children, for many years have looked forward to building the place of worship for the small fry.

Although lack of building material made it impossible to build a parish hall, an old carriage house, adjacent to the Church of the Reformation on East Capitol st., was purchased last year, along with an historic residence—and now there is a Children's Church.

On Children's Day, as originated by the Church of the Reformation Sunday School many years ago, each child is presented at the service with a flowering geranium plant to take home. This year 200 members of the primary and junior departments will be happy recipients.

During the brief year that the Children's Church has functioned with the Reformation Church, parents continually seek permission to visit the services. So numerous are the requests that parents must make reservations. Now on Children's Day in the "big church" everyone will have an opportunity of viewing the ceremonies as the children worship every Sunday.

Small Organ Prized

One of the most beautiful of Washington's children's chapels is located in the National Cathedral. With hands clasped in reverence before them, the youngsters sit enthralled when on special occasions, Philip Hubert Frohman, designer of the prized four-octave organ, plays.

Rotation of sermons by ministers and canons is part of the regular program. Talks include educational explanations of the colors, flowers and Biblical incidents depicted on the stained glass windows which all can see as they listen. The religious songs which are sung are the children's own and learned as part of the school curriculum.

AT the Church of the Reformation, it has long been the custom to present each child of the congregation with flowers, in commemoration of the historic day. Above, Sunday School Superintendent Thomas P. Hickman gives blossoming geraniums to a few of the 200 in his flock. Reading clockwise are Nancy Kelm, David Best, Joyce Crow, Edward Lyerly and Pat Ricketts

Town Talk—

By Eva Hinton

AMONG the books which gave help and comfort to Andrew Jackson and his family and which still can be seen in the library of his home, The Hermitage, near Nashville, Tenn., is "The Virginia Housewife," by Mrs. Mary Randolph, Washington, 1824. (One wonders if she is a forbear of the popular Misses Nannie and Polly Randolph, social arbiters of the Capital.)

"The government of a family," writes Mrs. Randolph, "bears a Lilliputian resemblance to the government of a nation. The contents of the Treasury must be known and great care taken to keep the expenditures from being equal to the receipts. A regular system must be introduced into each department which may be modified until matured, and should then pass into an inviolable law. The grand arcanum (a secret or valuable elixir) of management lies in three simple rules, 'Let everything be done at the proper time, keep everything in its proper place, and put everything to its proper use.'

"Early rising is also essential to the good government of a family. A late breakfast deranges the whole business of the day and throws a portion of it on the next.

Mrs. Smith Seeks To Trade House Seat for Senate

A girl who married her newspaper boss and years later succeeded him as a Congressman is out to win admission to the country's "most exclusive gentlemen's club," the United States Senate.

Representative Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.) wants to succeed retiring Senate Majority Leader White (R., Me.). "I think I can extend the same service to my State as I have to my district," she says, adding that Gov. Horace Hildreth is expected to oppose her in the primary. She must wait a year to learn her fate, however. The Republican primary, tantamount to election in Maine, will not be held until June, 1948.

Diplomatic Circling

THE Siamese Legation is planning two important events this month. On the 17th, a musical will be given in the Department of Commerce Auditorium and on the 24th, a reception at the Embassy will celebrate National Day of Siam.

With their new Ambassador and Princess Wan Waithayakon in town, the Embassy staff has made elaborate plans for both events. Fiddles, flutes and a bamboo xylophone were flown from Bangkok that the guests of honor will be certain to feel at home. Color films of their native heath will also be shown.

The reception, of course, commemorates that day in 1932 when the Siamese form of government changed from an Absolute to a Constitutional Monarchy.

Gen. Ciprino Olivera, Uruguay Army Chief of Staff, who arrived in town Thursday, was given a dinner Friday night by Lieut. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway at the Statler Hotel.

The General will tour military installations throughout the United States while here. He will leave Washington today and plans to return June 26, when he will be guest of General Eisenhower at a Pentagon luncheon.

MISS HILDA VALLARINO, who has been visiting with her aunt and uncle, Ambassador and Senora de Arias in Lima, Peru, has returned to the Capital where she will rejoin her parents at the Panamanian Embassy.

Ambassador Vallarino was awarded an honorary doctor's degree by Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster, Pa., yesterday and today he will go to Atlantic City to attend the American Medical Association conference.

The Assistant Naval Attache of the Soviet Embassy and Mme. Skriagin gave a cocktail party Friday in honor of the new Naval Attache, Rear Admiral Eugeni Georgievich Glinkov and Mme. Glinkov. Their daughter, Miss Vega Glinkov was also present, as were Ambassador and Mme. Novikov along with Naval Attaches and officials from other agencies.

SENORA LUZ DE NIETO DEL RIO, wife of the Chilean Ambassador, arrived in Washington Wednesday, accompanied by her daughter, Senora Luz de Ossa.

Neither mother nor daughter had been here before, and both expressed amazement at the size of American cities and some of our customs.

Another new arrival in town is Capt. Rutger de Croneborg, who replaces Commodore Olaf Angelia as Naval Attache at the Swedish Embassy. Capt. Croneborg's family will arrive late in August.

A garden party for international lawyers was given at the British Embassy Thursday afternoon, attended by Capitalites and State Department officials.

THE new Paraguayan Ambassador, Dr. G. Enciso Vellose, arrived in New York Thursday. He and his wife and two children are expected at the embassy sometime this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge Durbrow left Friday for Moscow, where Mr. Durbrow will serve as First Secretary at our embassy.

The Counselor of the French Embassy, Pierre Siraud, has returned from Paris, and the Counselor of the Danish Embassy and Mme. Bang-Jensen from Montreal. The Bang-Jensens were accompanied by their daughter, Karen, aged 4.

For several months Cafe Continental has broadcast over Station WQQW on Mondays and Fridays between 5:30 and 6 p. m. Music of different countries is featured, and the program has become very popular, especially with members of embassy staffs.

Graduations, Luncheon Hold Interest at War College Post

By Bessie Hackett

THINGS are really humming at the National War College that military post practically in the heart of Washington.

With the nine-month courses coming to a close, activities are highlighted by graduation exercises—on June 21 for the War College and on June 26 for the Industrial College of the Armed Forces. There's also a lot of packing going on and farewell parties being given as new orders are handed out and officers and their wives prepare for redeployment.

Big event in feminine circles is the luncheon to be given on Wednesday at the Officers' Club by the wives of Industrial College students. Honor guests will be Mrs. Gordon P. Parks, wife of Captain Parks, USN, president of the student group; Mrs. James G. Anding, wife of Colonel Anding, vice president, and Mrs. Harold P. Hennessy, whose husband, Colonel Hennessy, is executive officer of the college.

Hostesses will be Mrs. Arvo N. Niemi, in charge of the arrangements; Mrs. G. A. Gjoerloff, Mrs. James Stamm, Mrs. James Clow, Mrs. Blair Henderson, Mrs. Walter R. Godard and Mrs. Paul Sphar. Entertaining the group after luncheon will be Mrs. Warren Hastings and Mrs. Clarke

Mais Oui, Mes Amis, A Fine Idea! Just Call Me Van!

NEW YORK, June 7 (INS).—French Councilor Jacqueline Patenotre will tell American Senator Arthur Vandenberg next week that French lawmakers would like to be friends with American Congressmen on a sort of "call-me-Jim" basis.

Senator Vandenberg, who has a ripe sense of humor, no doubt will smile when his secretary ushers in one "J. Patenotre," the only woman member of her party (Rassemblement des Gauches Republicaines) elected to France's Council of the Republic. For "J. Patenotre" is a slim, glamorous 30 with plenty of bounce.

She is president of the newly-organized 80-man French-American committee, a sort of parliamentary fraternity.

Miss Munter Becomes Bride Of Lieut. Derr

MRS. PHAON BAIR DERR, JR. ... June bride

BEFORE an altar of spring flowers, Miss Katherine Marie Munter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey L. Munter of Washington, became the bride yesterday of Lieut. (j.g.) Phaon Bair Derr, jr., USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. Phaon Bair Derr of Cynwyd, Pa. The ceremony took place in the home of the bride's parents, and a reception followed in the garden.

The Rev. Thomas G. Smyth, pastor of The Shrine of the Blessed Sacrament, was officiating clergyman. Mr. Munter gave his daughter in marriage.

The bride wore a gown of heavy ivory satin fashioned with fitted waistline and full skirt ending in a slight train. Her veil of illusion wes held by a coronet of seed pearls, and her flowers were white camellias which she carried with a white prayer book.

The bride's roommate at Sweet Briar, Miss Virginia Gordon Barron of Rome, Ga., was maid of honor. Her costume was soft blue organiza and lace, worn with matching lace headdress and she carried a bouquet of white daisies and red roses.

Miss Gloria Jane Munter and Theodore A. Munter, youngest sister and brother of the bride, served as junior attendants, and led the wedding procession.

Edwin Immel Stouffer 3d of Merion, Pa., was best man.

Edith Patton Married in Ohio Ceremony

IN Hillsboro, Ohio, yesterday a wedding of interest to Washington took place when Miss Edith Steele Patton became the bride of Louis Albert de Cazenove of Seminary Hill, Alexandria. Mrs. de Cazenove is the daughter of Mrs. Charles Andrew Barry and the late Clyde C. Patton. Her husband is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. de Cazenove.

The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's mother, and a wedding breakfast followed, attended by relatives and a few intimate friends. Mr. and Mrs. de Cazenove left by motor for California. After a visit there, they will go to the bridegroom's cottage at Detroit Lakes, Minn., for the remainder of the summer. They will be at home at Stuartland, Seminary Hill, after December 1.

A graduate of Walnut Lane School, Philadelphia, the bride is the niece of the late Col Frederick Poor and of the late John C. Poor of Washington. Mr. de Cazenove attended McGuire's School in Richmond, and has several degrees in engineering from Cornell University. Since retiring from active work in his profession, he has had large farming interests in Minnesota.

Mr. de Cazenove is descended from Gen. Jame O'Hara of Revolutionary fame, of the Lords Calvert of Maryland, and of Richard Henry Lee.

Local Girl Bride in California

MISS Mary Elizabeth Partridge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Acker of Washington, was married yesterday in San Francisco, Calif., to John C. Lyman, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Lyman of Santa Monica, Calif. Bishop Block performed the ceremony in the chapel of Grace Cathedral.

The bride was given in marriage by her mother and attended by Mrs. Gerhardt Van Arkle. E. C. Arbuckle served as best man. A reception in Mark Hopkins Hotel followed.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyman will reside with the brother-in-law and sister of the bride on return from a honeymoon at Lake Tahoe.

The bride attended Sarah Lawrence College and her husband studied at Stanford University. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Phillips from this city attended the ceremony.

Miss Talbot Hostess At Army-Navy Club

Miss Barbara Talbot, daughter of Col. and Mrs. William Millstead Talbot, was hostess to several young friends yesterday at a luncheon at the Army and Navy Town Club.

Guests were the Misses Patricia Partridge, Gail Hall, Georgia Washington, Ellen Anding, Virginia Chard, Elizabeth Wood, Audrey Strode, Barbara Easton, Catherine Sullivan, Greta Hill, Susan Godfrey, Cornelia Tarrant and Martha Ann Smoot.

Miss Pickens, Mr. Fogarty Wed

In Annunciation Chapel at 11:30 a. m. yesterday, Miss Elizabeth Ann Pickens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James R. Pickens, Arlington, Va., was married to Edward J. Fogarty, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Fogarty, Omaha, Nebr. The Rev. Vincent P. Cleri officiated.

The bride, given marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin and lace with finger-tip veil and carried a bouquet of white roses. Mrs. Courtney E. Owens, matron of honor, was gowned in pink crepe with white lace hat. Similarly costumed, in blue and yellow, were the bridesmaids, Miss Mary Jeanne Monta and Miss Elizabeth Fogarty, sister of the bridegroom. Joseph A. Pavelka, jr., acted as best man and ushers were William R. Pickens and Courtney E. Owens.

Holton of Altoona, Pa., elocutionists; Mrs. Leo Tooley, soprano, and Mrs. Charles Ross, pianist.

First of the wives to depart was Mrs. William J. C. Hayward, who left Thursday for New York to sail for London. Major Hayward, British Army, will follow after graduation. Another English couple who've been here for the industrial college course are Lieut. Col. and Mrs. William P. Careless. Returning to Ottawa for the summer will be Lieut. Col. Frank E. Anderson, Canadian Army, with his wife and their 5-year-old daughter, Frances. Also heading back to Canada will be Col. and Mrs. Earl C. Mayhew and 4-year-old Kenneth.

CAPT. (USN) and Mrs. J. H. Newsome have just received orders for Guam are still a little out of breath over the idea. "I've been almost everywhere else, though and I'm looking forward to this—even if it's a Quonset hut," declares Mrs. Newsome in true Navy wife tradition. Accompanying the Newsomes when they leave for San Francisco by car, June 27, will be their 13-year-old daughter.

Air Corps Col. and Mrs. R. F. Wiseheart's orders are still indefinite, so on June 28 they'll pick up their two little girls, Marcia and Virginia, and go south to spend a month in Miami with the Colonel's brother and sister-in-law, Judge and Mrs. Marshall Wiseheart.

Col. Richard J. Werner, executive officer at the National War College, and Mrs. Werner will entertain about 50 guests from 5 to 7 this afternoon at a cocktail party in connection with the closing of the school year. Last of a series, the affair will be held at their quarters.

Novel mimeographed maps showing the way to 3541 S. Stafford st. in the "hinterland" of Fairlington led about 40 guests last night to the home of Col. and Mrs. William L. McCulla, who were hosts at another end-of-school cocktail party. Among those dropping in for a graduation drink were Admiral and Mrs. Harry Hill, Gen. and Mrs. A. Greunther, Gen. and Mrs. W. L. Richardson, Gen. and Mrs. Everett S. Hughes, Representative and Mrs. Edward H. Jenison of Illinois; Gen. and Mrs. T H. Landon, and Gen. and Mrs. R. M. Lee. The McCullas will be hosts again this evening when they entertain some of the Colonel's West Point classmates at a buffet supper.

CAPT Ernest Becker, jr., USN, and his pretty brunette wife, Doris, daughter of the late Representative Allard Gasque of South Carolina, are getting ready to start for California the first part of July, when the captain will take command of the cruiser Springfield. Yesterday the Beckers went down to South Carolina to spend a week with Doris' mother, Mrs. A. J. Vam Exem, and on their return will make plans for a farewell party at the Sail Loft.

Number 13 holds no terrors for Col. and Mrs. William Millstead Talbot. In fact, they consider it their lucky numeral. June 13 happens to be the colonel's birthday; it was also the day in 1929 that he received his commission from the United States Military Academy, the same day he and Mrs. Talbot were married.

So, next Friday, the 13th, Col. and Mrs. Talbot will be hosts at a dinner party at the Army and Navy Town Club celebrating their eighteenth wedding anniversary. Guests will be Col. Robert H. Chard, one of their ushers; Mrs. Chard, Col. and Mrs. Milton Godfrey, Col. and Mrs. Legare Tarrant, Col. and Mrs. Alvin L. Pachynski and Col. and Mrs. Edwin G. Griffith.

Mr. Shepherd, Mis McDonald Repeat ows

AT the Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament yesterday morning, Miss Patricia Lea McDonald, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arch Linn McDonald, Sandy Spring, Md., exchanged marriage vows with Orville Edward Shepherd, son of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Alvin Shepherd, Burnt Mills Hills, Silver Spring, Md. The Rev. Charles Gorman officiated.

Escorted by her father, nationally known baseball broadcaster, the bride wore a short-sleeved gown of white organdy made with shirred apron effect caught in a bustle at the back. Her finger-tip veil cascaded from a coronet of shirred layers of illusion and she carried gardenias. A gold Rosary, worn around the neck, was her only ornament.

Miss Claudia Carbo, maid of honor, was costumed in pale blue dotted swiss with matching crownless picture hat. Other attendants were the bride's sister, Mrs. Winston H. Barnard, Miss Judith Koch and Miss Jayne Doyle, all of whom wore pale pink with matching halos and all carried old-fashioned bouquets. Francis Carr served as best man and ushers were Arch H. McDonald, Charles T. Miller and John Bausch. The bridegroom's cousin, Dale Simpson, acted as flower girl, wearing a long dress of white dotted swiss, and Michael Considine, son of the columnist, Robert B. Considine, was ringbearer. Mr. and Mrs. Considine and their three children came down from New York for the wedding.

Another out-of-town guest was the bride's maternal grandmother, Mrs. J. L. Handly of Chattanooga, Tenn.

A reception followed at Aliden Farm, home of the bride's parents on Layhill rd. Following a trip to the Poconos, the couple will reside in Silver Spring, where the bridegroom is in the construction business with his father.

Simone—Repetti

In Sacred Heart Church yesterday Miss Catherine Louis Repetti, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Vincent Repetti of Washington, became the bride of Michael Joseph Simone, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dominic Simone, also of Washington. The Rev. Paul Repetti officiated at the ceremony, and a reception followed at the home of the bride.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white slipper satin and a finger-tip veil held by a tiara of seed pearls. She carried a prayer book covered with white orchids and wore a single strand of pearls.

Miss Mary Repetti attended her sister as maid of honor, clad in gold lace with matching mitts and hat. The bride's other sisters, Miss Elizabeth Repetti, Miss Louise Repetti, Miss Agnes Repetti and Miss Anne Marie Repetti were also bridesmaids. They wore aqua and pink crepe gowns with lace accessories and carried prayer books with roses.

Visitors and Parties Crowd Leesburg's Summer Calendar

Leesburg, Va., June 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lawrence Thompson, who were recently married, were the guests in whose honor Mr. and Mrs. Hayward Cadden Thompson are entertaining this evening at their home, Stoney Point, Hillsboro.

The Thompsons, who were married May 24 in Bethany Methodist Church, have just returned from their wedding trip to New England. Mrs. Thompson is the former Miss Hazel Lee Simpson of Purcellville.

Mr. and Mrs. William Hanna entertained at a reception on Thursday afternoon at their home, Dunrobin, near Leesburg, for Gen. and Mrs. Julius F. Howell of Bristol, Va. General Howell, CSA, who is nearing his 102d birthday anniversary, has been in Washington attending commemorative services.

Col. and Mrs. Robert S. Pickens left Tuesday to attend commencement exercises at Bryn Mawr College, where their daughter, Miss Cornelia Pickens, was one of the graduates. Miss Pickens sailed for France Friday. She will serve as counselor in one of the French government's rehabilitation camps for French children.

Elizabeth Murray Harrison, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stirling Harrison, was christened this afternoon in St. James' Episcopal Church, the Rev. J. Manly Cobb officiating. The godparents were Miss Elizabeth White of Leesburg, Miss Agnes Brown and Lewis Grammer of Philadelphia.

Elder and Mrs. H. H. Lefferts had as their guests over the week-end their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Horace L. Lefferts and their family of Wilmington, Del. Also visiting them on Friday were Mr. and Mrs. Miles S. Lefferts and their small daughter.

Col. and Mrs. E. B. White will entertain at supper Sunday evening in honor of Col. and Mrs. A. L. Tynes. Their daughter, Mary Jordan White, feted 25 children at a party this afternoon in honor of her fourth birthday.

Miss Verlie Hollandsworth of Stuart Circle Hospital, Richmond, is spending a three weeks' vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Hollandsworth.

OUTFITTERS TO GENTLEWOMEN SINCE 1903

Mary Haworth's Mail

Air Corps Veteran, 26, Demoralized by Life In Combat Zones, Is Morosely Devoid of Self Respect; Feels Unfit to Marry; Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am an Air Corps veteran, 26, and have a problem that I can't discuss with my family or friends for fear of the consequences. I have thought of talking to my pastor, but feel I would die of shame if I tried to unfold the story to him.

The story dates back 10 years, but the real crack-up started after I entered the Army in 1942 . . . Now I'm nervous, high strung, morose—almost, if not already, out of my mind. Death would be merciful deliverance from my present distraction; but if I haven't the backbone to pull myself together, then surely I am too great a coward to commit suicide.

Wants to Change; Where to Begin?

FOR A WHILE after leaving the Army I considered entering some religious order, where I could live a self respecting life,—a life that would square with my concepts of decency. But conscience tells me that such a solution would be sacrilegious in the sight of God.

There is one girl in particular who wants to marry me; it's no secret that she is in love with me; but I keep away from her because I might, in a moment of weakness, promise her marriage; and I don't want to get her involved with a man as worthless as myself.

I know that I represent the lowest form of human being and I would like to change, but I don't know where or how to begin. Please advise me; please try to help me at your earliest convenience, as so much depends upon it.

E. P.

Churchman Plugs Psychoanalysis

DEAR E. P.: Rabbi Joshua Loth Liebman's book "Peace of Mind" became a best seller and created a continental furore of enthusiastic discussion last year for the reason that he is speaking from the pulpit with a new voice.

He is pointing the way to a different and better approach to religious ministry than people in general have known in the past—an approach which respectfully embraces psychoanalytic insight into human motivation as invaluable equipment for pastoral work.

Scripture tells us, "God is light and in Him is no darkness at all." All great mystics have shared an awareness that the purpose of life is to know and love God.

And the essence of Rabbi Liebman's message, it seems to me, is that psychoanalysis is a light-giver which, if applied to religious ministry by spiritual men, can be of incalculable value in bringing the peace of God to the minds of men—by guiding them to a saving understanding of the "forces of darkness" within themselves that trip them up and make their hell, which forces consist principally of rampant fears spawned by benighted ignorance.

THESE remarks are preliminary to saying that I wish, for your sake, that your pastor might be a competent light-giver in your case. I am sure he would like to be. And I am equally certain he would take no offense—would not be shocked—no matter how sordid the story you have to tell.

However, it is problematic whether the average clergyman could kindle sure comprehensive insight into the specific forces of darkness that are fomenting your emotional disorder; and it is this type of help you must have in order to rebuild on a firm foundation of self respect, develop rational mastery of your actions and become the sort of character who "squares" with enlightened concepts of decency.

All things considered—including the fact that you write from a smallish city—I believe the best steering advice I can give is to apply to the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, at 1790 Broadway, New York City, for a reference list of psychoanalytic services available to veterans in your area. Address your inquiry to Dr. George S. Stevenson, medical director of the committee.

The fact that your morale was smashed during combat service might qualify you for federally-financed treatment; and if you state the case to Dr. Stevenson as honestly and unflinchingly as you have to me—so frankly indeed that discretion compels me to omit much of it—he will recognize its desperate urgency and render the maximum assistance he can muster.

Academy Set Say Farewells; 86 Officers Leave on Cruise

ANNAPOLIS, Md., June 7.—Another June week at the United States Naval Academy ended yesterday with the graduation of the class of 1948-A, and Annapolis is now turning its attention to the annual farewells to Navy friends who are leaving for duty in other places or starting well-earned leave periods.

Eighty-six officers from the various departments of the Naval Academy will make the midshipmen's summer practice cruise, leaving Annapolis today and returning August 26. Senior aide for the midshipmen on the staff of the commander of the midshipmen's practice squadron, Rear Admiral John Perry, will be Capt. Basil N. Rittenhouse, executive officer of the department of seamanship and navigation. In addition, to the 86 officers, Profs. Royal S. Pease of the department of English, history and government, and Henry W. Drexel of the department of foreign languages will also be aboard.

Among the officers making the cruise are Lieut. Comdr. John J. A. Michel, Comdr. John A. Heath, Comdr. Stephen S. Mann, jr., Comdr. James B. Rutter, jr., Lieut. Comdr. Jesse W. McCoy, Lieut. Comdr. David P. Polatty, Comdr. Asbury Coward, Lieut. Comdr. Frank M. Hertel and Comdr. C. Russell Burke.

Mrs. Singleton Entertains

Capt. Charles Todd Singleton, head of the department of ordnance at the Naval Post-Graduate School, and Mrs. Singleton, entertained on Wednesday evening at a formal dinner in honor of Comdr. and Mrs. Charles L. Fraser and Capt. and Mrs. Ephraim P. Holmes, who will be leaving the Academy shortly.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles C. Bramble, former residents, came here Wednesday from their home in Dahlgren, Va., for a reception given in their honor at the North Severn Officers' Club by the entire staff of the post-graduate school. Dr. Bramble, who was a senior professor at the post-graduate school and head of the department of mathematics there, is now head of the ballistic section at Dahlgren. Capt. and Mrs. Frank Winant are at present occupying the Bramble home on Monticello ave.

Edwin Warfield, retiring chairman of the Commission of Tidewater Fisheries, was the guest of honor at a picnic supper held aboard the Potomac Wednesday evening by his staff, and all office employes in the department.

Mr. Warfield Departing

Mr. Warfield, who has been affiliated with the department for the past eight years, is leaving Annapolis this weekend.

Capt. E. John Long, assistant curator at the Naval Academy Museum, has moved to Washington, where he will assume his new post as executive officer for the Secretary of the Navy. While in Annapolis, Captain Long occupied quarters at the Officers' Town Club.

Your Questions on Homemaking

I would like to dye some Army lightweight khaki material for use as slipcovers. Will this dye and would it be advisable to use my spinner type washer to dye it in? Will it harm the porcelain inside of the washer? I am planning to use a contrasting color of fringe. Will it ever be possible to dry clean or wash without the dyed khaki running? I would appreciate any advice you can offer.

S. R.

If you read the dye manufacturers' directions carefully and follow them exactly you should obtain excellent results. For permanent color, you will need to boil the material in the dye bath. Obviously, you would not be able to do this in your washer. The dye, however, would not harm the porcelain inside the washer providing it is not chipped or cracked.

If you boil the dye into the material and rinse until the water is clear, it should not fade into the fringe in future washings. To be doubly sure, why not use a darker fringe or plan to always have it dry cleaned?

Use plenty of water for the dye bath. When the material is in the dye bath keep it in constant motion and be sure it is completely immersed at all times.

How shall I care for light wood furniture? How should it be cleaned and preserved? Does ordinary orange commercial paste wax deepen the color? Should it ever be oiled with lemon or linseed oil? I have a baby grand piano in a walnut veneer case. Although the overall effect of the finish is good, there are several bad places which are cracked and scratched. How should the finish be cared for in general to prevent further deterioration, drying out, etc.? How can a part of the veneer which has loosened be glued back? Is there a finish which can be applied to a light birch table top to make it heat proof, stain proof, etc.?

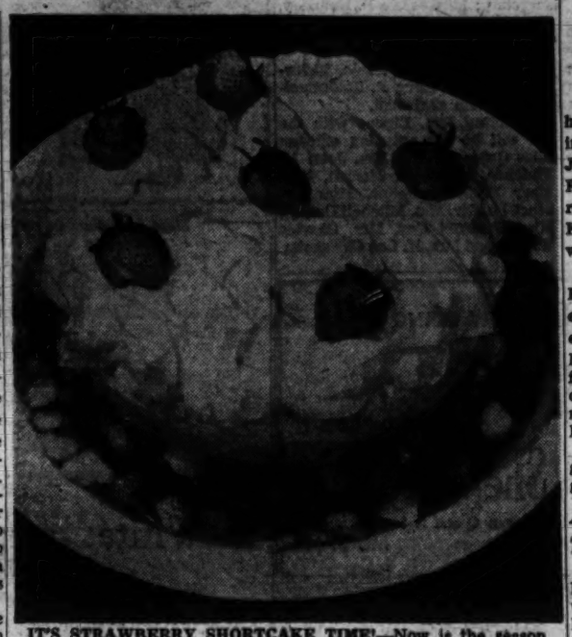
M. F. S.

Light woods are treated exactly like dark woods; give them frequent dusting, polishing and scratch removing. Use only cream-colored wax as the darker waxes will tend to darken them. Lemon or linseed oil to which an equal part of turpentine has been added is satisfactory if applied over surfaces which are clean and free from dust and polished thoroughly. Such polishes should be applied two or three times a year. Between polishings, wood surfaces should be rubbed often to build up the desired luster. "Elbow grease" is as important as any oils you may buy.

The finish on your piano can be improved by using the above method of caring for it. As the polish is cracked and scratched, it would be wise to use a good wax. If rubbed thoroughly and frequently, this would give a hard finish and help cover up blemishes. A humidifier in the room will help to prevent drying.

Use aeroplane glue or a good furniture glue to put back the loosened veneer.

There seems to be no special finish to make a wooden table completely heat resistant. If you will keep the table well waxed it would help to protect it, but you should always use hot pads and coasters, too.



IT'S STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE TIME!—Now is the season when you can indulge your family's weakness for fresh strawberry shortcake. The June market is well stocked with the big, red, luscious berries that rank so high in popular appeal. So, buy yourself a pint basket-full and whip up the following for Sunday brunch, dinner or supper:

2 cups sifted flour; 3 teaspoons baking powder; 1 teaspoon salt; 6 tablespoons butter; 1 egg, well beaten; 1/3 cup milk; sweetened sliced strawberries; whipped cream.

Mix and sift dry ingredients. Cut in butter. Add combined egg and milk. Mix quickly. Divide in half. Knead lightly on floured board. Roll to fit 9-inch cake pan. Place one piece in buttered pan. Brush with butter. Cover with second piece. Brush with milk. Bake in moderately hot oven (375 degrees F.) for 20 to 25 minutes. Separate layers. Spread bottom layer with butter. Put layers together with berries between and on top. Cover with cream. Six servings.

On the Capital Club Front

Takoma Park Women's Club will hold its annual luncheon featuring installation of officers, Thursday, June 12, at 12:30 p. m., at Brook Farm Restaurant, 6501 Brookville rd., Chevy Chase. Mrs. Edwin Kennedy, the principal speaker, will discuss "Life in Holland."

Honored guests will include Mrs. Edward C. Magdeburger, newly elected president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Eric Schwartze, chairman of the federation's international relations department and Mrs. Arno Rush, member of the Maryland House of Delegates.

Members of the club's choral group will present a musical program.

Alexander Pen Women To Hold Luncheon

The Alexander Branch, National League of American Pen Women, will conclude its season with a gala luncheon preceded by a business meeting, Friday, June 13, 1 p. m., at the George Mason Hotel. Mrs. Lonore Kent Kiefer, national membership chairman and vice president of the local branch, will review her recently published book, "Paint, Power—and How to Sell It."

The speaker is an authority on home decoration. As director of save the surface campaign for the National Paint, Varnish & Lacquer Association, her articles were published in more than 900 newspapers and broadcast over 125 radio stations.

Mrs. Kiefer will be presented by Mrs. Kyle Booth, league president.

MRS. ROLAND O. LAINE
. . . Wed in Bethlehem Chapel

Underwood & Underwood
MRS. ALFRED F. FLYNN, Jr.
. . . Atlantic City honeymoon

In Orange Blossom Parade

Laine—Houghton

In Bethlehem Chapel of Washington Cathedral yesterday, Miss Joy Houghton and Roland O. Laine were married. Mrs. Laine is the daughter of Carlos Cranford Houghton and the late Mrs. Houghton. Her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Laine of Cambridge, Mass.

The bride was escorted to the altar by her father. Her gown was of white satin with long train. Her finger-tip veil was held by a cap of Belgian lace which her mother had worn as a bride.

Mrs. Leland Thielemann of New York attended her sister as matron of honor. She was dressed in lemon yellow marquisette and carried white and blue flowers. Miss Caroline Irish and Miss Virginia Sutton, bridesmaids, wore gowns of blue and carried white flowers.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Houghton.

Flynn—Spittle

Miss Lois Adele Spittle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth B. Spittle of Washington, and Alfred F. Flynn, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Flynn, also of this city, were married yesterday afternoon in the parish hall of St. Anthony's Church, the Rev. John Dressell officiating.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white chantilly lace, a seed pearl crown holding her silk veil, and carried white roses and stephanotis. Mrs. Genevieve Koutsos, matron of honor, wore pale blue dotted swiss and carried pink roses. Thomas Cox was best man and serving as ushers were William Yost, James Popham and Joseph McCarthy. A reception at Admiral Club followed.

The newlyweds will reside in this city on return from their Atlantic City honeymoon. Mr. Flynn attends George Washington University, where he is a member of Kappa Alpha.

Kirks—Koester

Petworth Baptist Church was the scene of the marriage yesterday evening of Miss Katharine Louise Koester, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Koester of Washington, and John Barckley Kirks, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Kirks, also of this city. The Rev. James P. Rogers officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was gowned in ivory satin, her full length veil falling from an orange blossom tiara. She carried white roses and purple orchids. Matron of honor, Mrs. Stuart K. Rich, wore blue and carried brandywine roses. Bridesmaids were Mrs. Thomas McNicholas Bowen, Mrs. Allan G. MacLane and Miss Elizabeth Jane Sincell, wearing pastel gowns and carrying spring bouquets. Joseph Allan MacLane was best man and ushers were Richard Eugene Koester, Clarence D. Ruffner, jr., Charles Daniel Conway, 2d, and J. Stuart Rich. A reception followed, after which the couple left for a wedding trip along the coast.

The bride attended Western Maryland College and George Washington University.

Tricks for Teens

By Nancy Pepper

Fashions for Fun

Every once in a while, somebody produces a fashion novelty that's just right for teens. The teen department of your favorite store stocks it, this column tells you about it—and you buy it. Everybody's happy except your parents who find they have to increase your allowance.

And, no wonder, when you bedeck yourself with fake flowers! Let the poets say, "In the spring a young man's fancy," we think a young woman's fancier—especially when she's a teen who works out flower tricks like these:

CHARMING CHATELAINE—Make a chatelaine out of two little flower clusters, connected by several shades of narrow velvet ribbon, or by multicolored ric-rac braid. Back the flowers with tiny safety pins and you have the midsummer version of the chatelaine to wear on cotton dresses or peasant blouses.

WAISTLINE WHIMSEY—Buy a cluster of flowers with stems at least 4 inches long, and tuck it under your belt at the left side of your waistline. We saw one teen-ager in a simple gray chambray dress, spiked with a bunch of yellow buttercups under her belt—and she looked like a million. The cost was considerably less.

CHOKER, GARDEN VARIETY—Nothing could be more enchanting with your off-shoulder blouse than a demure choker of black velvet ribbon around your neck, sewn with artificial flowers. We like daisies best. They come in handy when you can't tell whether he does or not.

BOWS IN BLOOM—Now that you're wearing those large butterfly bows at the back of your heads (and you should be, you know), you're trimming them up with flowers, sewn on separately in helter-skelter effect.

With all of this glamour, you're not giving those susceptible characters, known as boys, a fair chance.

Double Feature

We used to love Perry and Andy and Bing;
We swooned every time we heard Frankie boy sing;
But the Man of the Moment who Kindles the Sparks
Sings like Al Jolson and looks like L. Parks.

Casbah Quiz

What's your rating around the soda fountain? Give yourself 10 per cent for each question. The passing mark is 70 per cent. If you rate 100 per cent you get the double banana split—plus several phone calls tonight. You'll find the right answers below:

1. Should you barge into a booth without being asked to join the gang?
2. Should you drool for hours over one soda while others are waiting for a seat?
3. Just because you meet a boy you know, do you expect him to treat you?
4. Do you have taking ways with glasses and silverware?
5. Should you turn on your loud speaker around the soda fountain?
6. Should you blitz the dirt where everyone can—and does—listen?
7. Should you curdle the Soda Jerk with special orders?
8. Should you go in for a snack, and stay for a banquet?
9. Do you squander your whole income at the local fountain?
10. Should you use the place for a Date Bureau?

Now, here are the right answers. Time passed quickly and we hope you do, too.

1. NO, its polite to wait till you're asked. 2. NO, find another parking space. 3. NO, it's the woman who pays, unless it's a prearranged date. 4. NO, there's a word for taking what doesn't belong to you—and it's not a pretty one. 5. NO, it's high time you learned the difference between "Glamour" girl and "Clamour girl. 6. NO, don't be the girl with the Sense of Rumor. 7. NO, wait your turn and don't expect French cooking. 8. NO, think of your figure—other people do. 9. NO, unless you want to sacrifice the new Guy Madison movie or the latest Monroe platter. You can't eat your allowance and have it, too. 10. Definitely NOT. A pick-up always leads to a let-down.

Well, how are things in Glocca Mora—or isn't it a fine day?

Be Smart

COTTON IN THE FORM of sheerest organdies, shadow-printed as well as plain, is one of fashion's smartest summer fashions. Smartly new, too, is the simplicity of a tailored type bodice against a magnificently bouffant skirt, sometimes with a tiny apron of black all-over lace appliqued by hand.

Down Virginia Way

Clark-Liggett Nuptials Part of Busy Calendar

By Nina Carter Tabb

TWO weddings yesterday high-lighted the Virginia hunt country's weekend social agenda.

Miss Jane Liggett of Warrenton became the bride of Mr. Hildreth Meigs Clark of Lowell, Mass., and Rye Beach, N. H., in one colorful ceremony in St. James Episcopal Church, while the other wedding united Mrs. Charlotte R. Lawson of Rectortown and Mr. Walter Nelson Munster in the Grace Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Paul Bowden officiated in the Clark-Liggett nuptials. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Clarke Tileston Baldwin of Warrenton, and the late Mr. Baldwin. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Talbot Clark of Lowell, Mass. and Rye Beach, N. H.

Given in marriage by her brother, Clarke T. Baldwin, jr., the bride wore a gown fashioned of family rose-point lace over ivory satin. The sweetheart neckline was edged with lace as were the long sleeves. The bodice was fitted tightly and the long, full skirt flared into a long lace-edged train. Her tulle veil fell from a cap of lace and she carried a cascade bouquet of gardenias and stephanotis.

Miss Polly Baldwin of Warrenton, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Barbara Hartley of Southampton, Long Island; Miss Mary Millard of New York City; Miss Jessie Richmond of Boston, Mass.; Miss Lucia Winston of Lake Forest, Ill., and Mrs. William C. Burrage, Miss Emily Neilson, and Miss Sally Spilman, all of Warrenton. They wore Nile green chiffon. Their headdresses were of matching tulle and flowers.

Thomas T. Clark of Portland, Me., was best man and the ushers were Peter Hayden Clark of Lowell, Mass.; Liggett Baldwin, Putnam B. McDowell, Arthur F. Blackman and Peter Fullers all of Boston; David Boies, jr., of Ann Arbor, Mich.; Henry H. Moulton, New York City; Edward Norris 3d of Hartford, Conn.; John Crocker, jr., and Hamilton Coolidge of Boston; George Stevens, North Andover, Mass.; Henry F. Bannister, George C. Warren, Stephen B. Ives, jr., Frederic C. Hood, all of Cambridge, Mass.

The church was decorated with white flowers and the chancel lit with cathedral candles. Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother.

The bride is a graduate of Foxcroft School, Middleburg, an accomplished young horsewoman and a member of the Warrenton and Middleburg Hunt. The groom, a graduate of Brook's School, later went to Harvard College, graduating in 1946. He is a member of the Hasty Pudding Club, A. D. Club.

After a Southern wedding trip, the couple will make their home at Dudley Center, Mass.

Among the out-of-town guests were the groom's grandmother, Mrs. Joe V. Meigs; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Talbot Clark; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Clark and their daughter, Miss Phebe Clark; Miss Phillis Clark. The bride's godfather and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond; Col. and Mrs. Percy Black, and the bride's aunt, Mrs. Liggett Scrivenor. Other guests were Mrs. Eldridge Jordon and Mrs. Thomas T. Clark, jr.

Miss Sally Spilman and Mr. and Mrs. W. Harry Pool entertained at a dinner party in honor of the couple, Friday evening at the Pools' home near Warrenton; Mr. and Mrs. William C. Burrage gave a cocktail party on Friday afternoon, after the rehearsal at the home of her mother, Mrs. Robert Wallach; Miss Emily Neilson gave a luncheon for the bridesmaids Friday and Mr. and Mrs. Murray Black entertained the bridal party and guests at luncheon yesterday before the wedding.

IN THE OTHER marriage, the Harold B. Peters officiated. The bridegroom, Mr. Munster, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Munster of Port Huron, Mich. and The Plains, Va.

Given in marriage by her stepfather, Roland G. Pierce, Mrs. Lawson, wore an aqua taffeta gown, made with fitted bodice, sweetheart neckline, puff sleeves and a bouffant skirt. Her headdress was of matching tulle and flowers and she carried a bouquet of mixed flowers.

Miss Catherine Powell Hobson, cousin of the bride, was maid of honor and the bride's only attendant. She wore a pale yellow taffeta dress made with fitted bodice, puff sleeves, sweetheart neckline and full floor length skirt. Her headdress was of matching tulle and flowers and she carried a bouquet of mixed flowers. George Morrow of New York City was best man.

The church was beautifully decorated with white flowers and lit with taper candles. Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held at the clubhouse next to the church. The bride and groom were assisted in receiving by her mother, Mrs. Roland G. Peirce, who wore a frosted blue crepe gown, made with square neckline and floor-length draped skirt, and a matching hat trimmed with tulle veil and white aigrettes. She wore a corsage of pink roses.

The mother of the bridegroom who also assisted in receiving was costumed in a blue chiffon gown, black hat trimmed with white flowers. Her corsage was made of gardenias. Among the guests was the grandmother of the bride, Mrs. Robert S. Cochran of The Plains; Cochran Hooson, aunt of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Munster, Mrs. George Morrow, jr., of New York; Mrs. Meade Montgomery of Augusta, Ga.; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Cochran and Mr. and Mrs. Parke Picer of Alexandria, Mr. and Mrs. Gray Beverley of Winchester, Mr. and Mrs. John Guett and Mr. and Mrs. Bolling Robertson of New York City, Mr. and Mrs. C. Duncan Van Horn of Ontario, Canada; Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Forsyth and Mr. and Mrs. James Sawyer of Arlington, Peyton Robertson of Lexington, Va.; Rolfe Robertson of Blacksburg, Va., and Bolling Robertson of Princeton, University, all three brothers of the bride.

Marshall—Imirie

In Sixth Presbyterian Church yesterday, with the Rev. Edward G. Latch officiating, Miss Margaret Ann Imirie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lewis Imirie, Bethesda, Md., was married to Wallace Ashby Marshall, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Ashby Marshall, this city.

The bride, escorted by her father, wore a gown of white mousseline de soie and fingertip veil held in place by a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried her grandmother's prayerbook with white orchids.

Miss Millie Helen Imirie, maid of honor, was attired in pink marquisette and the bridesmaids, Mrs. James P. Allnutt and Miss Lucille Morrison, were in aqua and orchid marquisette, respectively. All wore matching shoulder-length veils and carried spring bouquets.

The bridegroom's father acted as best man and ushers were Raymond L. Reynolds, jr., and Bobby Marshall, cousin of the bridegroom.

After a reception at the home of the bride's parents, the newlyweds left for Atlantic City and New York. They will make their home in Washington.

Anderson—Carpenter

At a candlelight ceremony yesterday in the chapel of Mount Vernon Methodist Church Miss Mary Carpenter became the bride of L. Gerald Anderson.

The bride is niece of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Richard Carpenter, Fayette, Iowa, and Mr. Anderson is son of Mrs. Lulu H. Anderson, this city.

Officiating at the ceremony was the Rev. John W. Rustin. The Rev. Purcell Storey gave the bride in marriage. She wore a gown of lace and mousseline de soie and a finger-tip length veil held with a coronet of seed pearls. Her bouquet was of roses and gardenias. Miss Ruth Carpenter, maid of honor for her sister, was costumed in a frock of pale pink crepe and carried a bouquet of pink roses and cornflowers that matched her headpiece. Paul H. Anderson was best man for his brother and ushering were John H. and Earl Anderson.

Bigelow—Scaggs

Married yesterday morning in Trinity Episcopal Church, Upper Marlboro, Md., were Miss Hettie Gene Scaggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond L. Scaggs, and Robert O. Bigelow, son of Mr. and Mrs. George O. Bigelow of Baltimore, Md. The Rev. J. C. M. Shrewsbury officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was gowned in white satin and tulle, a coronet of orange blossoms and tulle holding her finger-tip veil. She carried roses and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Glen Irwin, wearing yellow nylon and carrying roses and delphinium, was the bride's only attendant. C. Chester Bigelow was his brother's best man. The couple will reside in Upper Marlboro following a Florida honeymoon.

Miss Villamin Becomes Bride

In St. Matthew's Cathedral yesterday Miss Catalina Eulalia Villamin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vicente Villamin of Washington and Los Angeles, Calif., formerly of New York, became the bride of H. Gael Baldwin, son of Judge and Mrs. Willis S. Baldwin of Warrensburg, Mo. The Rev. John B. Argaut officiated.

Escorted by her father, the bride wore a white satin gown with long train and bodice trimmed with seed pearls. Her three-tiered veil fell from a pearl-trimmed toque and she carried a white prayer book with orchids.

Miss Virginia Ursula Villamin was her sister's only attendant. She wore a lettuce-green dress and carried an old-fashioned bouquet of mixed flowers. Philip Major Dale, jr., of New York was best man. A reception followed at the Hay-Adams House.

After a visit with the bridegroom's family in Warrensburg, the newlyweds will sail for a three-month honeymoon in South America and on their return will reside in New York.

which opens the door for confusion to enter . . ."

Mrs. Randolph gives such exotic recipes as those for making pomatum (lard and perfume), cosmetic soap for washing the hands, lemon pickle, tomato marmalade, and for pickling nasturtiums, radish pods, and English walnuts.

ONE quaint recipe which I should like to see tried on cocktail-drinking Washington is for orgeat. The early writer called it "a necessary refreshment at all parties." She describes the mixing thusly: 2 quarts of milk boiled with a stick of cinnamon, (remove cinnamon and let stand till cold), 4 ounces of the best sweet almonds blanched and pounded in a marble mortar with a little rose water and mixed well with the milk, the mixture to be sweetened to taste, boiled a few minutes only (lest the almonds be oily) strained through a fine sieve till smooth and free from almonds, and served up either cold or luke warm, in glasses with handles."

Another recipe which intrigues because of its name and ingredients is "Vinegar of the Four Thieves," for which, "Take lavender, rosemary, wormwood, rue and mint, of each a large handful. Cover with 4 quarts of strong vinegar in an earthenware pot, cover pot closely, put a board on top and keep in the hottest sun for 2 weeks. Then strain and bottle it, putting in a clove of garlic . . . This vinegar is very refreshing in crowded rooms" (perhaps it uncrowds the room pretty quickly with that clove of garlic) in the apartments of the sick, and peculiarly grateful when sprinkled about the house in damp weather."

Mrs. Randolph's little volume has added interest because inside the front and back covers are rough drawings of the front gate and parts of the fence at the Hermitage.

Another household mentor in the Jackson library is the "House Servants' Director," by Robert Roberts, Boston, 1828 (second edition). Among the hundred or more recipes recommended are the following:

"To turn good wine into vinegar in three hours; to restore the same wine to its first taste; to preserve good wine to the last; to recover a person from intoxication (vinegar or hot coffee or hot wine); a beautiful secret to clean brass and copper; an excellent mastic for mending china and a wash to revive old deeds or writings (boil gall nuts in white wine, then pass this smoothly over the old writings and they will appear directly as new as when first wrote)."

Uncle Sam Hangs 'For Sale' Sign On Its 'Igloo' Homes in Virginia

TENANTS in the DHC's "Igloo Village" have indicated they would like to buy their dwellings, but the government agency has put up the 12 houses, with 15 acres of land, for sale as one unit. They were built as an experiment in 1941 to house war workers

By Conrad P. Harness

IF YOU have $55,000 and a desire to live in a concrete house shaped like an igloo—give Defense Homes Corporation a ring.

The Government agency has officially put a "For Sale" sign on its 12 "balloon shaped" houses located on Lee hwy. west of Falls Church, Va. But you will have to buy them all.

Along with the unconventional housing goes 15 acres of undeveloped land fronting on Lee hwy., zoned for apartments. The homes are rented at present for a gross annual rental of $6720.

Put on the market last week, only one request for a bid form has been received so far, indicating buyers may be scarce for DHC's last remaining property in the metropolitan area.

The homes were built over five years ago in a Federal attempt to quickly produce war housing. Built with a spray gun, they were originally planned to house warworkers.

To build them a balloon was inflated, wire mesh placed around it and concrete sprayed on in layers. When the balloon was deflated the shell of a house remained. Windows, doors, utilities and interior plaster were added.

The igloos come in two sizes, a single balloon and a two-balloon job. The latter is joined together by a flat-roofed section containing an entrance hall, furnace space and bath.

The twin-balloons, of which there are 10, boast a large living room with fireplace, two bedrooms, kitchen, bath and closets and rent for $50 per month. The single balloons rent for $30 per month and have one bedroom, small living room, bath, kitchen and storage space. Gas heats the homes.

Gas bills are a sore point with tenants. The concrete dwellings contain no insulation or air spaces and heavy condensation results. Tenants are in a continuous battle with mildew.

One tenant, Mrs. Jane Benson, wife of a War Department attorney, said her heating bills were often $40 per winter month. Another tenant, Mrs. Frank G. Soule, said she had also paid $40 gas bills.

The Falls Church realty firm of Eastman & Steele project property managers, said all tenants liked the structures and many had talked about banding together to buy the village.

Questioned about the estimated value of her house, Mrs. Soule replied: "Oh, about $4000, I guess."

A DHC spokesman said the agency could only evaluate the homes and land using the gross annual rental revenue as a basis, plus a rock bottom figure of $1000 per acre for the land. On that basis the development would be worth at least $55,000.

The property is for sale for cash only and settlement must be made within 60 days of the acceptance of the successful bid. Offers made in behalf of undisclosed principals would not be considered, DHC added. The agency has reserved the right to reject any and all offers and indicated it would reject any offer which didn't meet the agency's appraisal.

Under present housing regulations, tenants cannot be evicted from dwelling unless the new owner wishes to move into one of the homes.

The homes originally cost the Government $91,000, of which $22,000 was for land. Estimated construction cost of the single igloo homes was $3000 and the twin igloo at $6300. Lots have a wide 100-foot frontage.

Mrs. Soule and Mrs. Benson said no one interested in bidding for the property had asked to examine their homes. However, casual visitors often drive through the project's one street, Horseshoe dr., and frequehtly ask to be shown through one of the homes.

Whoever buys the property will have a group of satisfied tenants on their hands. A spokesman for Eastman & Steele, now collecting the rents, said they had received no complaints from tenants.

Asked whether the building experiment could be termed a success or failure, DHC replied: "Both, a success from the fact that all the tenants love them and a failure because condensation causes high heating bills and mildew."

Mrs. Soule agreed with the two-way answer: "It's fine out here, especially in the summer!"

Comfort Isn't Expensive

Plenty Can Be Done About the Weather

DO you simmer in the summer? The annual struggle to keep homes and apartments cool is here. Within another month, most Washington families will wish they were on a summer-long beach or mountain vacation. But there is still time to do something about the heat and many steps can be taken to provide summer comfort without a great deal of expense.

The idea may seem corny, but on hottest days, additional coolness can be provided by an electric fan circulating air across a large bowl of ice. Dampened sheets hung in occupied rooms with a fan directed toward them also are used with success.

The kitchen is the source of much unnecessary heat. Ovens of the most modern cook stoves are well insulated with mineral wool so they don't heat up, but there is no way to control heat generated by top-of-the-stove cooking. Hence, hot weather meals should be planned with minimum preparation on top of the stove.

Don't Let Attic Be Hot Box

DOORS leading from the kitchen to living quarters should be kept closed when the stove is being used, and electric lights used sparingly. Lower ceilings and smaller rooms in today's homes have brought a definite summer cooling problem. Better Homes and Gardens has suggested five ways to increase home comfort during the summer months ahead.

On warm summer days temperature in a closed attic often gets up to 135 degrees. Louvers (slatted openings) at each end of the attic allow heat to escape. Place them to take advantage of prevailing winds. You need at least 25 square inches of vent area for each 100 square feet of attic floor. If you already have attic windows, you probably have enough ventilation.

A kitchen exhaust fan carries off heat and cooking odors. One type fits into a pane in your kitchen window. Another is set into a wall, usually above the range. The fan should face the windward side of your home. Most kitchen fans are inexpensive. They cost less to operate than a 40-watt bulb and change kitchen air in about a minute.

Awnings keep out sunshine and 65 per cent of the heat. Those with sides keep more sun off windows, but hot air gathers under them and prevents heat in the house from escaping. Awnings without sides let air pass underneath and the flow pulls heat out.

A lawn and shrubbery are not only pretty, they absorb more sunlight and reflect less heat into your house. Soak your lawn regularly. You'll have a cooler house.

Color of outside walls, in addition to making your home attractive, can affect the inside temperature. Dark colors absorb heat; light colors reflect it. A test of two identical brick houses, one white and the other unpainted, showed the painted house was 13 degrees cooler on a hot day. Roofing with sandlike crystals in it reflects more heat than a dark roof.

Insulation will prevent summer discomfort in your house. Good insulation in walls and ceilings makes at least a 15-degree difference in room temperature. If you insulate walls, little heat penetrates. Insulation reflects heat and retards extreme changes of indoor temperature. It saves 15 to 30 per cent on your winter fuel bill.

Outdoor Living Is 'Built-in'

Home builders are taking advantage of the exceptional facilities for outdoor living. Many new houses now feature patios, terraces, gardens, sun decks and complete outdoor living rooms, surrounded by lawns and shrubbery.

The present practice of building garages as integral parts of the houses has aided the trend to outdoor living. The large unbroken spaces in the rear allow for landscaped gardens, lawns and yards.

Outdoor living is stimulated by Federal Housing Administration regulation which limit the portion of the lot that may be covered by the home structure. The purpose is to insure ample open areas to afford privacy, light, and air and to permit use of the plot for recreational and entertaining activities.

Floors of new outdoor living rooms are usually of brick, tile, or concrete. A portion of the open space is roofed. The rear wall of the home may have exterior decoration in the way of shelves, cupboards for wood storage, and built-in seats.

New Weekly Reports Trend In Real Estate

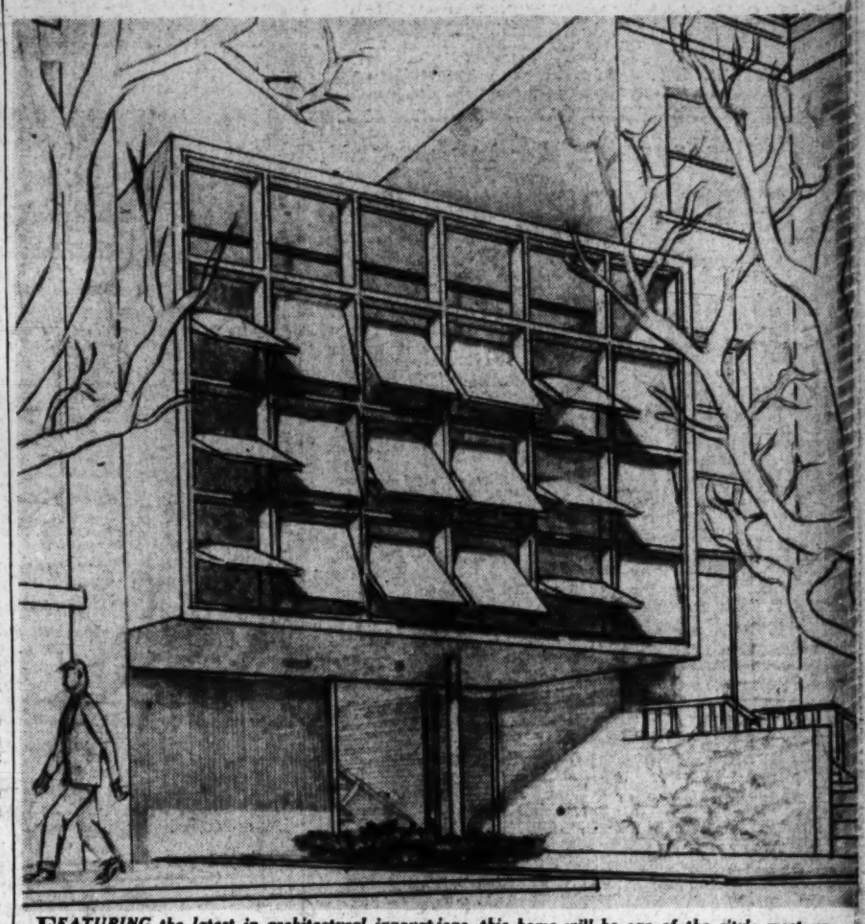
Montgomery County's booming real estate business has founded a new publication of interest to realtors, builders and others associated with the building, sales and financing of nearby Maryland properties.

The Montgomery County Record Reporter, edited by Ellis M. Jones, 5531 Manning dr., Bethesda, is a weekly report of all realty transactions recorded in Montgomery County.

Jones has been engaged in Maryland realty title work for the past two years and has lived in Bethesda for 10 years. He served with the Army Air Force for three years.

The report provdies information as to price trends in county properties, current market activity, who is buying and selling, prices paid and the amount of loans made on properties by lending institutions.

D. C.'s Most Unusual Town House Planned for 18th Street Site



FEATURING the latest in architectural innovations, this home will be one of the city's most unusual town houses. It will be erected soon on a vacant lot at 1718 18th st. nw. The strange looking windows are manually operated baffles which also protect a glass wall partition

WHAT will probably be called Washington's "most unusual town house," a two-story home featuring the latest architectural innovations, will be erected soon at 1718 18th st. nw.

When completed, it will resemble neighboring houses about the same way Jet Pilot compares with a plow horse. Everything about the house is of unconventional design, but the over-all appearance will be about as monotonous as a million dollar bill.

The plan calls for extravagant use of natural wood walls, hanging stairs, a flagstone floor, a free-standing fireplace, and scores of built-in furniture items.

Designed by Architect Charles Goodman, 814 18th st. nw., the structure will feature scores of modern space and maintenance saving features for which Goodman's designs are noted. The architect has gained Nation-wide attention from his modern home plans.

A building permit application has been filed by Roy Thurman, owner, for erection of the unusual home. Thurman, an official of the Mount Vernon Mortgage Corp., is one of the original developers of the Longfellow Building, Rhode Island and Connecticut aves. nw., the District's most modernistic office building.

The lot is only 20 feet wide by 40 feet deep, but has been ingeniously used in developing the open type floor plan characteristic of Goodman's work. The result is a creation of spaciousness far greater than is usually developed from such a small lot.

The structure's unconventional exterior appearance will probably stop traffic. The entire front consists of 24 manually operated, perforated baffles which protect a glass wall partition directly behind. Between the baffles and the glass wall is space for a small and here's why!

Everyone's Moving to

Where else can you find such large attractive homesites situated in the beautiful rolling Virginia hills on direct transportation route and just 15 minutes away from downtown Washington?

And where else can you find the "perfect setting" for that rambling Colonial farmhouse or ranch house styled home you've been dreaming for lo these many years?

And, where else will you find the right community with 80-foot boulevard streets, parkway, curb and gutter, sidewalks, city sewer and water, and—well—we could go on and on raving about STRATFORD HILLS, for we believe it's "tops." Suppose you come out and see for yourself. It's possible that we can help you make that dream come true.

STRATFORD HILLS, located in the exclusive country club section of Arlington, can be reached by driving over Key or Memorial Bridge and out Lee Highway to Old Dominion Dr., out Old Dominion Dr. to George Mason Dr. and entrance to property.

High Court Judge Gets Barber's License

Lincoln, Nebr., June 7 (U.P.).—E. B. Chappell of the Nebraska State Supreme Court, may hang out another shingle if he wants to.

Chappell stepped down from the bench to take, and pass, the written and practical tests in barbering given by the State examining board. The judge practiced the trade for nine years before entering the legal profession.

"He just wants the license for sentimental reasons, I think," Examiner Jack Gore said.

Real Estate Round-Up

IT HAS BEEN estimated that a minimum of 12,000 people in the Washington area make their livelihood from the sale of real estate or its allied interests of title insurance, mortgage financing and property management. The realty field offers promising awards to its successful students. Yet, nowhere in the District is there an educational course for prospective realtors comparable with school facilities open for prospective lawyers, teachers, accountants or journalists.

That condition is being alleviated in Boston where 120 students have enrolled in a full-time, two year, professional, real estate school which boasts its own building and faculty.

The Boston Business Institute's "School of Real Estate Practice" is developing highly-skilled real estate personnel. There is an acute need for skilled personnel in the general practice, banks, trust companies, established real estate firms, governmental agencies, insurance companies and other institutions.

The Boston institution feels that a distinct contribution will be made to the real estate economy when thoroughly-trained young men find their way into such career opportunities.

The school was formed last year as a nonprofit institution to pioneer in professional real estate education. Its president, Frederick J. Bashaw, has been a realtor for 18 years, is a member of the Massachusetts Bar and a past president of the Providence Real Estate Board.

Bashaw pointed out to this writer that few, if any, colleges or universities offer comprehensive programs designed to prepare professional real estate practitioners. The need in a field so intimately involving the public welfare was never more urgent, he added.

The first year course includes accounting, property law, mathematics, construction, real estate practice, principles of architecture, etc. The second and final year teaches advanced courses in most of the first year courses, plus office techniques of leading realty firms, public speaking, real estate economics and field training.

Graduation from an approved high school is a minimum requirement. Tuition is $450.00 per annum. A post-graduate counselor service is provided for five years subsequent to graduation.

HOUSING EXPEDITER FRANK CREEDON will face a barrage of questions from builders tomorrow at the June luncheon meeting of the Washington Building Congress, 12:30 o'clock, at the Mayflower.

Strike notices are out ordering all Building Congress members to walk out of their offices Wednesday, June 18, to join the picket lines at Prince Georges and Country Club where the organization is holding its summer outing.

Golf, softball, tennis, horseshoes, swimming and a dinner are on the program. Ritchie Edmonston, outing committee chairman, says the party will be held rain or shine.

MAIL BAG: The Montgomery County Real Estate Board will probably open a full time office in the near future with an executive secretary and other trimmings . . . Coming Events: Washington Real Estate Board tenth annual stag outing at Bay Side Beach, June 17; Architect's Hobby Show, June 12, at the Octagon, 18th and New York ave. nw. . . . NAREB's Community Builders Council of the Urban Land Institute, previously limited to 24 of the outstanding land developers in the Nation, is opening its membership to all those responsibly engaged in land development . . . The realty office of Simpson & Mays, on Wilson blvd. in Clarendon, is one of the best examples of remodeling we've seen. The office was formerly a service station, complete with grease rack.

Plumbing Cost Rise Slight, Survey Shows

Plumbing and heating products are one of the best buys on the present market in comparison with other commodities—according to the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau.

The bureau cites official Labor Statistics index numbers to prove price advances of plumbing and heating materials have been moderate.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics takes the year 1926 as basic. With 1926 prices represented by 100, the index number for prevailing plumbing and heating prices is 117.9 compared with 177.5 for all building materials and 142.2 for all commodities other than farm products. All figures are for March.

These index figures, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau, show plumbing and heating materials have advanced less than a quarter as much as all building materials and less than half as much as the average of all commodities.

With 50 manufacturers making plumbing fixtures and each company stepping up output, there is ample productive capacity to meet all requirements for plumbing fixtures, the bureau added.

Although the production of some types of plumbing fixtures now is at an all-time high, manufacturers are still handicapped by shortages of materials and labor. The lack of iron is hampering the output of enameled cast iron plumbing fixtures while an enameled steel shortage is holding back the production of formed metal ware. Manufacturers of vitreous china plumbing fixtures are unable to obtain adequate quantities of high grade clays.

By August, barring unforeseen developments, it is expected production of nearly all types of plumbing materials will exceed the prewar peak. Also significant is the fact that, as production increases, manufacturers plan broader lines so that plumbing fixtures will be available in a greater variety of styles and models.

Rare Books Worth Ten Million Dollars Saved From Fire

WIESBADEN (AP).—Ten million dollars worth of books, rare manuscripts and stage costumes hidden by the Nazis in a potash mine have been removed to the Marburg University library despite a smoldering fire in the mine shaft which for 11 months threatened the valuable collection. American Military Government officials reported.

Officials estimated about three million volumes were salvaged, including 1,400,000 books of the famous Prussian State Library, and the libraries of Marburg and Bonn Universities.

Only about 50,000 volumes were destroyed by the fire, which workers succeeded in blocking off from the bulk of the collection.

The volumes were hidden in a mine at Heinboldshausen, near the border between the American and Russian zones, as Allied troops advanced into Germany late in the war.

Don't 'Gild' the Small Home

Creating an attractive exterior appearance while keeping within a budget is one of the big problems in designing a small home. The house must be simple without resembling a box. It must be neither too high from the ground, nor look as though it's sitting in a hole.

The roofline, height and shape of the chimney, cornices, or dormers greatly affect the appearance of a house. An interesting roof treatment can give a squat little house added character, while projecting cornices may help to soften that square look.

Terracing up the front yard is a favorite way to make a house appear lower. Tall plantings also minimize height.

Ornamental Iron Work Is Again in Vogue

Ornamental Iron work is very much in vogue again and justly so, for its decorative value is high. The wrought iron of the Georgian period and earlier and the cast iron of a later day that was brought to a high state of perfection at the time of the Directoire both deserve a place in our architectural scheme.

Craftsmanship in wrought iron is once again receiving careful consideration, and some of the work now produced compares favorably with the best English or Italian examples of the art. Methods have changed little, and craftsmen today turn the beautiful curves and hammer out the delicate members much as their forerunners did generations ago. It remains one of the arts that has not been "improved" by machinery.

Cast iron is used mostly for decorative porches and grilles outside of windows, and many lovely designs have been resurrected from the past and originated for both these purposes. A porch with a convex standing seam metal roof against a white Directoire house makes a delightful picture.

The dark lacelike metal etched against the smooth white background gives a splendid effect, and the richness of the iron work contrasting with the severe simplicity of the body of the house enchances the best qualities of both.

The cost of good iron work is still high, so elaborate examples can be included only in the more expensive houses. But simple front-porch railings made of light members of stock sizes and designs are within the reach of many small-income home owners.

Balusters of one half inch square bars with a railing made up of a one inch by one quarter inch bar with a half round or turtle back on top gives a very pleasing effect at little cost. The newels should be about three quarter inch squares and should be let into the masonry and fastened in with lead.

It is less expensive to have the bottoms of the balusters set in an iron bar one half inch by one quarter inch, with occasional three quarter posts set in the masonry, than to omit this lower bar and have all the balusters fastened individually in the masonry. Brass finials of stock design can be used on the newels with good effect.

Joint Program Aims to Better Small Homes

The American Institute of Architects and the National Association of Home Builders are to collaborate in a program to improve the quality of low-cost homes and to reduce building costs, Douglas W. Orr, institute president, announced yesterday.

"The joint committee composed of architects and home builders has been appointed to prepare a suggested program," Orr said. "With small-house construction so badly needed and accounting for a major portion of the total building in the country, this collaboration should not only be very successful in speeding up the construction of small houses, but could have a very beneficial effect upon the character of the structures.

"We believe that the small-house field offers both an opportunity and a challenge to the architectural profession. In the past a large proportion of our small homes have been built without the services of a trained architect, with a resulting impairment of esthetic and economic values which is quite apparent in many medium and low-cost residential areas.

"Housing is a far greater factor in determining the appearance of a community than the fewer larger buildings, no matter how much architectural study is devoted to the latter.

"The collaboration between the institute and the builders will include joint meetings of local chapters or their committees, an interchange of convention speakers and the preparation of information to be disseminated among the memberships.

CHEVY CHASE, MARYLAND
4 West Leland Street
OPEN TODAY 1 TO 6 P. M.

Here is one of the most attractive and impressive homes in Chevy Chase, situated between the Columbia and Chevy Chase Country Clubs, built of stone by the owner-occupant and beautifully landscaped; rear garden partially terraced with flagstones.

In our opinion, as custom builders, this house is as well built as any we have ever seen and could not be duplicated today for the price being asked of $32,500. It will carry about $20,000 first trust and the owner does not require all cash above this figure.

The house consists of large living room with fireplace, dining room, center hall, kitchen and pantry on the first floor; second floor has 4 bedrooms and 2 baths; third floor has one bedroom and a large storage room. The screened porch runs the full depth of the house over the two-car tandem garage, which has an entrance into the basement. It is heated by oil and has been entirely redecorated. Possession about July 15.

To Reach: Out Connecticut Ave. to Leland, left on Leland to No. 4 and our "open" sign.

House Height Is Factor in Tree Selection

Selecting shade trees to beautify the home and afford protection is a matter requiring the serious consideration of every home owner, because of the many factors that enter into the decision. Each kind of tree and each possible location for a tree should receive attention.

The size and architecture of the home; the architecture, length and height of nearby homes or buildings, and the kind and size of trees in adjoining yards have a bearing on the proper selection of shade trees to obtain the correct landscape settings and neighborhood harmony in appearance.

The kind, size and location of shade trees also must be considered with reference to small ornamental trees, shrubs, hedges, flower beds, grass, driveways, walks, garage, clotheslines, pools, gardens, portions of the house, such as entrances, windows, gutters, basement walls and exterior tiling.

balcony. The chartreuse yellow baffles will keep out the hot summer sun and give privacy to the interior.

The exterior ground floor wall facing the street will be recessed and covered with corrugated polished aluminum. The overhead garage door will also be of aluminum.

An exterior red brick will extend from the sidewalk on 18th st. into the entrance hall. The flagstone ground floor will continue out into the small garden at the dwelling's rear.

The ground floor plan will boast a garage, entrance hall, dining room, kitchen and garden court. The ground floor will be paved in blue-gray Pennsylvania flagstone. The walls are of natural wood and brick and the ceiling is of natural wood.

A very unusual laminated oak, open riser, hanging stairway leads to the living room above.

Interior first floor walls will be of natural brick and golden Peky cypress. First floor ceiling walls will be of cypress, with cold-cathode recessed fluorescent lighting fixtures.

Upstairs will be a large living room with a free-standing fireplace. The latter will be sheathed in brass and is so placed that one can walk entirely around it.

The living room and other interior walls upstairs will be finished in rare woods.

Desks, sofas, beds and other furniture items will be built-in.

The proposed heating system is strictly unconventional. It will feature "reverse cycle" heating, which provides heat extracted from cold water. Pipes will be laid underground and water will run to the heating plant, processed, and flow into the cold ground again.

Such a heating system provides hot air in the winter, cold air in the summer. It will be the first of its kind in Washington. Similar systems (called "heat pumps") have been installed in the area, but have taken heat from water pumped from wells.

Repulse Heat Waves

Air Conditioner Sales Zooming in District

WORKMEN add final touches to "Luminaire," combination lamp and air-conditioning unit manufactured in the District by Parlong Air Conditioning Co., 1215 Kenilworth pl. ne. The unit is a permanent fixture and plugs into any electrical outlet.

"Vornadofan" works on aerodynamic principles to provide air circulation. Sales have been excellent

CARRIER Corporation has scores of new air-conditioning units on the market. This one circulates cool, filtered air through the room. A twist of the wrist can raise or lower temperatures

THE portable "Airette" contains a lot of power in a little space. Weighing only 22 pounds, the unit cools by forcing evaporation of water through a specially treated filter in the built-in reservoir

THE LOCAL citizenry is gathering ammunition for its annual battle with Washington's heat waves—take it from the air-conditioning industry.

Stores which sell fans and air-conditioning units report sales are zooming. Most retail outlets said the supply would definitely not be able to keep up with the demand.

A tour of downtown area department stores revealed a wide variety of merchandise aimed to lower room temperatures. Most stores reported sales had depleted the quantity of units on display.

The potential Nation-wide market of air-conditioning units has been estimated at one billion dollars by the Refrigeration Equipment Manufacturers Association. Less than 1 per cent of United States homes are now air-conditioned.

A local firm, Parlong Air Conditioning Co., 1215 Kenilworth pl. ne., has injected a local angle into the air-conditioning picture. The firm's assembly line is producing a unique "luminaire" shaped like an indirect fluorescent lamp, which will cool homes or apartments.

Besides its cooling characteristics, it boasts fluorescent lighting to enable it to double as a floor lamp.

It is a permanent fixture and, say the makers, is easy to install. It plugs in any electrical outlet and ties in with pencil-thin copper tubing to the home's water and drain connection.

Luminaire condenses the refrigerant, by use of water, instead of air. Three water lines are attached, one to admit water, one to expel it and one to drain off excess condensation.

The unit sells for $510. The D. C. firm has a production capacity of 250 weekly, and 30 employes. A spokesman said orders were pouring in from all over the United States.

A fan which has received a good local sales reception is the Vornadofan, which, the manufacturer claims, utilizes the latest aerodynamic principles to provide air circulation. It somewhat resembles a large searchlight, with fans instead of a bulb, and a $74 price tag.

Sales personnel use such terms as "dual injector cones," "intake air," and "deep-biting" propellers, in describing the unit. The motor is suspended in rubber cushion mounts for minimum noise and vibration.

Carrier Corporation has scores of different air-conditioning units on the market. One home unit sits on a window sill. Its refrigeration capacity is almost four times that of the usual household refrigerator. Moisture is removed from the air and discharged as vapor to the outdoors.

Cool, filtered air is circulated throughout the room. A twist of the wrist can raise or lower temperatures.

One of the smallest portable air-conditioners is the Airette. It weighs less than 22 pounds and is a complete, self-contained unit which requires no plumbing connections or special fittings.

Airette's manufacturer says cooling is by forced evaporation of water through a specially treated filter in the unit's built-in three-gallon capacity reservoir. It it encased in a richly finished cabinet. The cost is $99.95.

"Air-D-Lux" is a triple-threat unit which is a combination heater, cooler and cooker. The heating element is similar to the conventional space heater. The appliance can be turned on its back and a hinged grill pulled from the bottom to transform the unit into an electric cook stove.

The cooling element is furnished by a fan inside the unit. The versatile device sells for $39.95.

The Climax Room Cooler is a fan built into a heavy steel plate which can be placed into a window to draw cool air into the house. It can be installed with a screwdriver.

At high speed it is claimed the device can move 1350 cubic feet of air per minute, changing the air every minute in the average room. It forces hot air out, replacing with fresh air. It retails for $60.

If the prospective purchaser can find nothing to suit him, here's our last suggestion: An electric fan blowing across a bowl of ice can raise chill bumps in a short time.

Avoid 'Freaks'

Don't Forget Resale Value If Building

Real estate men call it resale value. A builder might say that it would be a freakish house, but whatever it is, the resale consideration of the home you are building should not be brushed aside.

Everybody, when he builds a new house, expects to live in it until he dies, but circumstances often compel the owner to sell. That's when resale value becomes important. It doesn't mean, however, that you must build a Cape Cod, or that you can't have a good modern. Individuality can express itself in design, but the value of your house will suffer if it clashes with its surroundings.

Equally important are the materials and equipment. There are thousands of improvements that are well known and well developed, but which are not found in many of today's houses. For example, how many of your friends have automatic heat and automatic hot water service? These conveniences have been available for a long time and, of course, no home can remain modern without them.

Is your home up to date with automatic heating? Have you ever given a thought to air conditioning? What about lighting, and is the wiring adequate to handle all the electrical appliances you will want in the future? Is the house completely insulated? Are your kitchen and bathroom as efficient as tomorrow? Do they have the last word in appliances and fixtures? If not, have you planned for them? Is your home structurally sound?

The wisest investment you can make in your house is "quality" construction, materials and equipment. If you do not skimp on these things your house will not be old fashioned in 1960.

Paint Often Can Correct Architecture

There are few things a home owner can do to his house which give such quick and satisfying results as painting. In addition to the protection it affords against rust and decay, paint properly applied can work a complete transformation in any home.

Particularly is this true since paint-making and its application has become an exact science. In fact, paint is often used as an adjunct to the architecture of the home, or to correct minor architectural faults in old houses.

It has been found that warm colors tend to make an object appear larger, while cool colors give a sense of smaller size.

For example, too-large dormers can be made to appear smaller by painting them a dark green so they blend with the roof and then painting the window sash white. Or a house that is tall and narrow can be tied closer to the ground by painting the first and second stories in contrasting colors and accenting any horizontal lines.

Summer is an ideal time to apply paint either inside or outside because moisture is not so likely to develop on surfaces as at other times of the year. Moisture is one of the principal causes of paint failures.

Even the finest paint will prove unsatisfactory unless applied on a completely dry surface. One should never paint during humid or foggy weather, nor immediately after a shower. Because of heavy summer dew frequently encountered, it is wise to do no painting until the morning sun has dried all surfaces.

Creedon Replies

U. S. Prefab Program Is Under Verbal Fire

A VERBAL tug-of-war over the merits of prefabricated housing is underway between Housing Expediter Frank Creedon and Joseph H. Deckman, local building materials dealer and chairman of the housing committee of the National Home and Property Owners Foundation.

Deckman has charged the Government's guaranteed market program for prefabs is a flop and should be scrapped. Creedon came back with a statement that the foundation spokesman's criticism "contained grossly inaccurate and misleading statements."

The quarrel is another in a long series of conflicts between Government housing authorities and private real estate leaders concerning Federal controls over the building industry.

Pertinent facts of the two statements follow:

According to Deckman:

"UNSOLD prefabricated houses are piling up in warehouses as a result of the Government's market guarantee program by which it is trying to encourage the manufacture of prefab houses by agreeing to purchase all unsold units at 90 per cent of the market value.

"The market guarantee plan is being turned into a WPA for prefab manufacturers who can no longer sell their products. The top prefab producer of 1946 has found that, although his product is the best on the market, he could no longer sell his total output.

"The manufacturer decided to protect himself by entering into a market guarantee contract with the Government. In order to comply with the requirements of the Housing Expediter's Office, the firm was forced to redesign its homes and produce a less desirable and less durable unit which is now being foisted upon the veterans with Government aid.

"None of the manufacturers operating under the market guarantee contracts is producing homes according to schedule. Only one is potentially able to meet the schedule but is afraid to produce homes which he obviously cannot sell."

Deckman recommended the whole prefabricated housing program be dissolved. "The only thing that would happen if the prefab program were to be ditched," he said, "would be that many left wingers and impractical Socialists would have to get off the Government gravy train and start working for a living."

According to Creedon:

"TO state that 'the Government is glutting the market with standardized small homes,' is utter nonsense. To date approximately 3000 houses have been built under those contracts, which is less than one per cent of the total number of new permanent homes completed during the same period. I have never known one per cent of anything to constitute a glut.

"To state that 'unsold prefabricated houses are piling up in warehouses as a result of the market guarantee program' is nonsense. Less than 250 are in warehouses awaiting distribution. The Government has not spent one cent for the purchase of any homes under the plan.

"To charge that the market guarantee plan is being 'turned into a WPA for prefab manufacturers who can no longer sell their products in view of the increasing buyer resistance to high prices and low quality of factory built homes is ridiculous. These companies have not asked for a dole and to date they have received not one penny from the Government.

"The reference to 'high prices and low quality of factory-built homes, is nonsense. In quality they stack up with the best."

Creedon said there was "absolutely no truth" to the statement that a leading prefab manufacturer "was forced to redesign his homes and produce a less desirable and less durable unit."

"The allegation that we did so is fabricated out of whole cloth."

Inspect Home Utilities Now

EARLY summer is the time that certain items of home equipment should be inspected, repaired and, if need be, replaced.

For example, a great many homes need new hot water heaters because they could not be replaced during the war. Particularly in this case of old-style equipment has become limed or clogged with dirt.

Formation of lime in feed pipes and tanks can reduce the flow of water as much as 80 per cent. This greatly lowers the efficiency of the heating unit and results in higher costs for hot water.

Likewise, refrigerators should be thoroughly inspected by a competent service man and any needed repairs or adjustments made now.

And the heating system certainly should be included in any survey of equipment. Perhaps a new boiler is needed, or it is desired to change the type of fuel used. Early summer is the ideal time for such work because as autumn approaches, suppliers and installation men will be swamped.

Poor Roof Is Costly Item

You wouldn't wear a skull cap with a full dress suit, yet that is what many people do when they save money on their roofs. Do not be misled by what seems like economy in the beginning.

The roof is the biggest exposed area on your house, and takes the hardest abuse. Whether your house is large or small, insist on a good roof and on well-established products.

Commonest types are asphalt, asbestos, wood shingles, slate tile. Among the new materials is aluminum. Investigate and select the best that your pocketbook can afford.

Whatever material which you select be sure that the color is one that you will not tire of. Asphalt, asbestos, wood and tile can be had in a large variety of colors. Slate has some natural color variations. You seldom go wrong with roof colors that are earthy. If you have other color notes on your house, like shutters, have them harmonize with the roof.

Make sure the material has long life. Reroofing is costly, and the time and attention you give now to selecting your roofing will be well spent.

Rabbit Story Flops

Columbus, Ohio (U.P.).—Municipal Judge Rodney W. Ross didn't believe it. He fined Clyde A. Scott and James Butler $25 each on charges of stealing 10 loaves of bread. They testified they just wanted to feed a pet rabbit.

Eye Catcher

Columbus, Ohio (U.P.).—Several persons hurriedly left a bus on the heels of a young high school girl here. She was carrying a sign which read: "Apartment for Rent, Unfurnished."

Clever Remodeling Changes Room to Distinctive Salon

Where space is limited, formal effects are difficult to attain, particularly in a dining room.

A housewife desirous of achieving classical lines in the decoration of the room where the family meals were served solved the problem cleverly. The change was accomplished in this fashion.

A white wainscoting ran around the room, and the walls above it were papered with a small white design on a light blue background. The ceiling was painted the exact shade of blue of the paper, and a narrow white molding furnished contrast. A composition black and white floor, resembling marble, was laid.

Three windows were grouped along one side of the room, and a casement bay window was at one end. Substituted for the gaily-cushioned window seat was a wide sill covered with dark blue tile. Attractive plants and flowers in suitable containers added the pleasing effect of a miniature conservatory.

This pleasant apartment did away with the air of severity often accompanying the strictly formal room, and yet retained dignity and was to me distinguished from the informal breakfast-room atmosphere common to many dining rooms.

The housewife replaced the electric fixture formerly used by a crystal chandelier. A black dining table and six matching chairs with gold-line decorations and white leather upholstery were added to the room, as were two white cabinets with black-and-gold trim. Also side draperies of dark blue brocade, matching the tile in the window ledge, were hung and topped with a valance of light blue to match the wallpaper.

Watch For Title Loopholes When Purchasing Real Estate

Few buyers of homes or other real estate realize the importance of having a clear, marketable title to the property which they purchase, according to the experience of mortgage lenders.

Most buyers know that a valid deed must be obtained, but this is only part of the procedure in acquiring real estate. The deed is merely legal evidence of the transaction between seller and buyer and does not necessarily mean that the seller had full legal rights to convey the property. The title must show the seller has these rights.

Failure to obtain clear title has often proved disastrous for purchasers. Heirs of early owners can and sometimes do sue for and obtain possession.

Any one of three methods is insurance, widely used on the East and West Coasts, abstracts of title in the Middle West, and the "Torrens System" used in a few States where the State itself issues the title.

Both abstracts of title and title insurance involve a complete search of the history of the property from earliest times. Hidden defects in titles, such as forgeries of early deeds, or other flaws often appear. Frequently the chains of title involve examination of hundreds of documents.

To protect the real estate buyer, abstracting firms and title insurance companies came into being many years ago.

New Devices to Ease Home Problems

A DRIP-PROOF faucet boasting a washer which can be changed without turning the water off at the main has made its bow—in England. It's guaranteed to take the splash out of washer changing. Consisting of only six parts, it is based on a principle resulting from wartime advances in hydraulic aircraft equipment. Inset shows a plug replacing nozzle. The top is taken out. Water is still on, but doesn't gush. American firms are expected to begin production soon

THIS incinerator can be installed on the same flue as the furnace and in the same basement locality as the water heater and other utilities. The manufacturers claim there is a rapidly growing trend toward the use of automatic heating equipment, where the home owner does not have adequate facilities for burning rubbish and garbage, as in the old coal-fired furnace days. All odors from burning garbage or trash are withdrawn through use of a special lining in the fire chamber, the maker adds.

THIS device locks windows automatically whether open for ventilation or closed. Designed to provide ventilation with safety against window prowlers and for protection of children against falling from open windows, the lock is made of steel and is easily installed

A TIME and trouble saver for hobbyists, housewives and shop craftsmen is this handy group of "window-lid" containers for small parts of all kinds. Aptly named "vue-bins," the sturdy metal cans feature transparent lid inserts of tough clear plastic. No labels are needed on the containers—contents can be seen at a glance

Plaster Cracks: Cause and Cure

Plaster cracks are most commonly caused by uneven settlement of the foundation or by shrinkage of the woodwork. Such cracks usually appear in corners or run diagonally across a wall. These cracks will continue until settlement or shrinkage has ended. Repairing should be put off until about a year, and then done with plaster of paris or a prepared patching plaster.

The safest thing is to avoid the possibility of plaster cracks entirely, and this can be done by using one of several methods of crack-resistant construction.

In these systems the lath, usually gypsum or composition board, is applied with special fasteners instead of being nailed direct to the wood studding. This allows the lath and plaster to float enough so that normal shrinkage and settling will not effect the plaster.

Output Will Meet All Housing Demands

Lumbering Booms in the Pacific Northwest

LUMBERJACKS begin "biting" a giant spruce near, Aberdeen, Wash. Sometimes the trees are so large it takes all day to fell one

LUMBER for new homes: screaming circular saws bite through mighty Spruce logs cutting to desired size, in an Aberdeen, Wash., sawmill. Scenes like this are being duplicated all over the Pacific Northwest, whose lumber industry supplies much of the nation's home-building materials

THE Pacific Northwest's lumber industry, which supplies much of the Nation's home-building materials, is having bright days, and logs keep rolling out of forests in record-breaking numbers, as shown above. Seven billion board feet of Douglas fir are expected to roll out of Oregon and Washington sawmills this year

By Gordon G. MacNab

PORTLAND, Oreg., June 7 (AP). These are the bright days of the Pacific Northwest's lumber industry, which supplies much of the Nation's home building material.

Axes and saws are cutting into forests at a peak tempo.

There's a difference of opinion on whether immediate demands can be met, but production is zooming, workers have signed a new contract and sawdust fills the air.

Seven billion board feet of Douglas fir are expected to roll out of Oregon and Washington sawmills this year; nearly the same total of pine is to be turned out by Western mills.

Fir plywood, cinderella of the lumber industry, is expected to have a production of a billion and a half square feet this year.

Those are the happy-days reports from the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, the Western Pine Association and the Douglas Fir Plywood Association.

Lumbermen Say "Yes"

To the big 1947 question, will the output be enough to build all the houses needed in the United States? H. V. Simpson, executive vice president of the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, answers "Yes."

"The industry can supply not only more material than will be required for the present housing emergency, but for needs in the foreseeable future," he says.

The Western Pine Association is more cautious, but it says there's a war-time find that will help: The Association's research lab developed a sealer for priming knots, and now lower grades of lumber can be used for outside finishing with assurance that paint will hold.

Thomas B. Malarkey, Plywood Association president, says there's no hope of meeting the demand for plywood. Too many people learned about plywood during the war, he says, and its uses have multiplied tenfold. He thinks present production, highest in history, will never be exceeded in the northwest.

But there's a factor other than supply in meeting the needs—price. Ellery Foster, of the CIO International Woodworkers of America, says lumber output will meet demand, but only because demand has been whittled by high prices.

Most good construction lumber stays in this country and Canadian importations are minor because of a Canadian law limiting carload exports to not more than 10 per cent clear lumber. It's a case of American production to meet American demand.

The lumber industry as a whole finds the outlook rosy. Waste utilization is another bright spot. Slabs and edgings from lumber manufacture are going into production of fiber board and craft products. During the war "snags" standing as long as 30 years were felled to go into fiber and paper products.

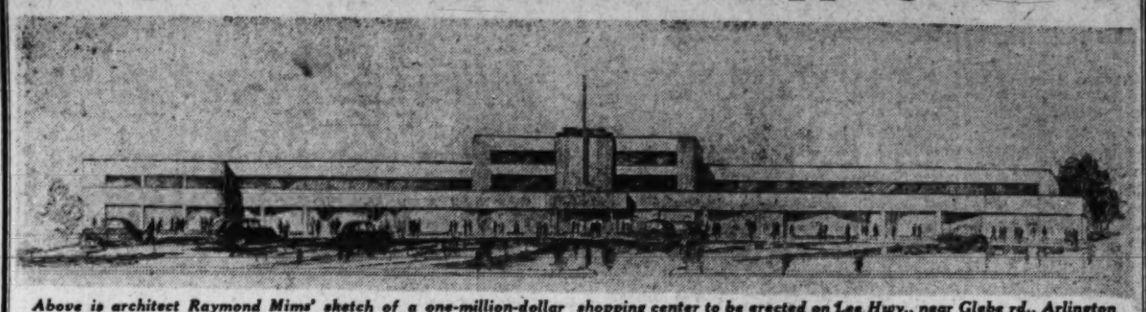
Arlington to Get Another Shopping Center



Above is architect Raymond Mims' sketch of a one-million-dollar shopping center to be erected on Lee Hwy., near Glebe rd., Arlington

Arlington, long called the "City of Shopping Centers," will soon have another.

A one-million-dollar five-story, 20-store shopping center will be erected on a three-acre site at Lee highway and N. Albemarle st., one block east of Glebe rd., The Post learned yesterday.

The builders, Wundoria Corp., will begin construction as soon as Federal permission can be obtained.

The project will have a 500-foot frontage on Lee highway and will be built of brick and limestone. J. Raymond Mims of College Park, Md., is the achitect.

The sloping ground on which the structure will be erected has been taken into consideration by the architect. Two of the building's five stories will be basement stories, but the lower floor will be on ground level at the rear because of the sharp ground dip. Parking for 450 cars will be provided in the front and rear.

M. T. Broyhill Co., Inc., agents for the project, said commitments had been made for the following type establishments: Furniture store, department store, 24-lane bowling alley, chain grocery, chain five-and-ten, chain drug store and other commercial shops.

The building will be air conditioned and will have central heating. Walk-up ramps from the street entrances lead to the fourth and fifth stories. Eating facilities will include a large public banquet room.

LARGEST BUYING CROWD EVER AT ANY MARYLAND BEACH!

WHY? BECAUSE DRUM POINT BEACH, WASHINGTON'S NEWEST AND LARGEST BEACH DEVELOPEMENT OFFERS...

2200 ACRES INCLUDING 6 MILES OF BEAUTIFUL SHORE FRONT

Bordered by Tall Majestic Hardwood Trees, with Miles of Clean, Wide, White Sand

• BEAUTIFUL

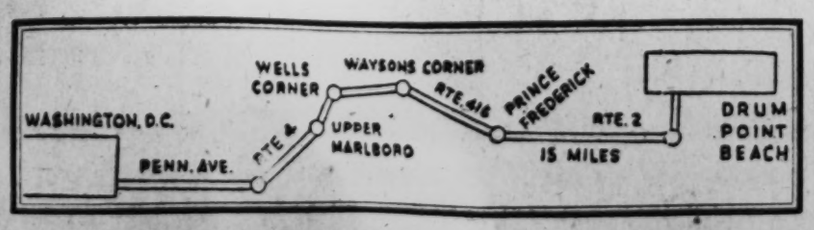
Much of the beauty of DRUM POINT BEACH is found in various exclusive spots that go to make up the many acres of DRUM POINT BEACH. Places that are away from the beaten path, where a cottage can nestle under shady trees and yet have a wide outlook over the sparkling blue water. Four beautiful, large, spring-fed, fresh-water lakes, hard sandy bottoms, teeming with fish, placed by nature in the sylvan setting of stately forest trees. It is impossible to describe the charm of DRUM POINT BEACH and impossible not to feel it. It is charm compounded of so many elements that the loveliness of the great stretch of shimmering water, clear sunshine, invigorating air and the glorious blue sky are soothing to the soul.

• CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUND

DRUM POINT BEACH—Insures your kiddies strong, healthy bodies and clear, active minds by providing the right place to obtain summer sunshine where the salt breezes temper the air and make it cool and delightful and where the kiddies can spend carefree days of fun and frolic.

• SPORTSMAN'S PARADISE

Our guests are amazed when first they see DRUM POINT BEACH. Miles and miles of clean, white sand, the sapphire-blue Chesapeake; shady groves to the water's edge; great ocean ships just off-shore; white winged yachts dipping and curtsying nearby; motorcraft landing pleasure parties; FISHING, BOATING, SWIMMING; all manner of sport in an ideal setting. DRUM POINT BEACH has one of the finest all-year-round harbors for large boats in the vicinity of Chesapeake Bay.



• RESTFUL

To one who has been to DRUM POINT BEACH and viewed its beauties, it is hard to visualize that so near Washington there is a quiet, restful haven that will make you feel miles away from home, business and care, and yet be so near the city that home and business can be reached by a delightful drive along well-paved highways.

Big Business Finds It's Cheaper to Rent

By George Tucker

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP).—Many of the country's largest business organizations are finding it cheaper to rent than to own, and the "buy-build-sell-lease" formula for internal financing is coming into fashion in all parts of the country.

Under this formula, a company which bought or built its plants or stores in the past now sells the property and immediately leases it back from the new owner.

The principal advantage is a saving on taxes. A secondary benefit is the freezing of capital for expansion or investment.

Today's high real estate values and high taxes are largely responsible for the current vogue of an idea that is not in itself new. Peak prices are being realized for plants and stores sold in the current market.

Sale of the large E. R. Squibb & Sons manufacturing property on Long Island a few days ago to Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York highlights the current trend. Squibb sold the eight-story, loft-type manufacturing plant to Mutual for $1,875,000, and immediately leased it back for an original term of 25 years, plus the right of renewal for five successive terms of 10 years each.

According to a Wall street investing firm, this type of deal originated in the middle thirties among chain stores and has since included Sears Roebuck, Continental Can Co., Gimbel Bros., Allied Stores, Inc., and many others.

A Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. spokesman explained it this way:

"Suppose you borrow a million dollars and build a factory. You amortize your loan at so much a year. Your only big tax deductions are depreciation on the property plus the interest paid on the loan. But if you sell-lease you still have occupancy and the entire amount of rental is deductible."

Neither Mutual, Metropolitan nor other insurance companies will discuss in detail deals of this kind in which they are involved.

The vice president of a large manufacturing company which some time ago sold its fixed assets and leased them back said his company did so because it needed more working capital.

"There is a real question whether sell-leasing or holding on to your property is wise," he said. "We kicked it around for several months and some of our fellows fought hard against it and are still against it. But with real estate what it is we figured we could earn more return on our money if we got it out and put it to work doing something else."

An illustration of sell-lease on a chain store basis is the package deal worked out by Allied Stores, Inc., with the Union College of Schenectady, N. Y.

An investing house spokesman in discussing the deal said: "Allied had a large debt. It sold all or most of its properties to Union, paid the debt, and took the stores back on a lease. From an operating standpoint it makes little difference whether you pay rent or own the building outright."

LET'S TALK ABOUT GARDENS

Weed Seeds Like Top Layers of Garden Soil

IS IT best to cultivate or mulch flowers, fruits and vegetables? Either system may control weeds and each has its place. Combinations of the two methods are far more likely to fit the average home yard.

Mulching of strawberries and other small fruits is commonly and logically followed. On the other hand mulching is not particularly practical for very short season items like radishes, lettuce, spinach, etc. The main function of cultivation lies in weed control, but mulching may often accomplish this result with less labor.

Volumes have been written about the benefits resulting from constant and thorough stirring of the soil around garden plants. The importance of maintaining a dust mulch has received much emphasis. This is important but the main advantage from cultivation lies in the control of weeds. Weeds rob the cultivated plants of water, food and light.

When allowed to develop undisturbed they soon literally crowd out and smother all except the more vigorous crops and even these are greatly injured through weed competition.

Most common and troublesome garden weeds start from seeds lying in the top layers of soil, mainly the top quarter inch. The destruction of these pests, while they are still small, requires only surface scraping of the soil.

Cultivation is simplified by using a very sharp hand hoe, a wheel hoe, or a garden tractor fitted with "sweeps."

This type of cultivation is entirely successful only when following the complete preparation of the seed bed with thorough pulverizing to the entire depth of the spade cut or the plow furrow.

Roots of most garden vegetables are near the surface. Don't cultivate too deeply near plants.

DEEP cultivation may bring seeds to the surface and give them an opportunity to germinate, whereas if left undisturbed, no germination or growth would have occurred.

Garden crop roots are most numerous near the surface. Deep cultivation near the plants is almost sure to be injurious. Stirring of the soil in the spaces between wide rows of vegetables, potatoes and tomatoes for example, leaving the surface somewhat rough to assist in the absorption of rain or irrigation water, may be advantageous.

Many very successful gardeners make a practice of working the row middles with a small triangular-shaped hoe leaving the surface in small pockets an inch or two deep.

Much has been said about not working wet soil. Few realize that walking in the garden after rains, or following irrigation, is also bad practice.

A footprint compacts the soil in heavy textured land and, after it dries out, a clod or lump remains. Very light, sandy soil may be worked within a few hours after a rain or the application of irrigation water.

As soon as the soil can be properly worked after each rain or irrigation, it should be thoroughly hoed or cultivated, to kill weeds that have sprouted and to leave the surface in a loose friable condition to absorb later rainfall.

Mulching Has Good Points

MULCHING has at least four strong points in its favor. Weed control, protection of low fruiting crops (cucumbers, tomatoes, etc., from splashing by soil particles during rains and while irrigating) moisture conservation by preventing excessive evaporation and the ultimate addition of organic matter to the soil are important advantages of mulching.

There are other advantages and some disadvantages. Unless the use of mulch is accompanied by liberal fertilization, especially with nitrogen, it may temporarily impoverish the soil and reduce plant growth. Mulch may be harmful on soil having poor drainage and where rapid evaporation might be very beneficial.

Mulching may be injurious during periods of wet weather on soils ordinarily having satisfactory drainage. In many cases this objection may be overcome by temporarily pulling the mulch away from the plants.

Most mulch materials, as ordinarily used, are not a perfect answer to weed control. They are quite effective for weeds which start from small seeds, but milkweed, horse nettle, wild onions and others break through most mulch materials and considerable hand work is required to keep control of them. Paper mulch is only partially effective because weeds come through the spaces around the plants, necessitating tedious hand work to remove them.

Mulching with material from the compost pile performs the triple function of adding organic matter, supplying plant food and improving the moisture-holding capacity of the soil, but this decayed material is not particularly effective in keeping weeds under control.

Mom Takes Buster's Snake Egg in Stride

By Fred Sailor Harvey

MRS. STERLING felt slightly uneasy, as she so often did when her 12 year old son, Buster, entered one of his periods of quiet, unexplained activity. Experience had taught her there was usually a sound basis for uneasiness.

This morning at breakfast she had waited for his wild burst of enthusiasm over the wonders he had seen at the village street carnival the night before. But he had only said with suspicious reserve, "oh, it was all right."

Mrs. Sterling and her husband had retired for the night when she heard Buster come into the house almost noiselessly, which was suspicious in itself, and tip-toed to the kitchen before coming upstairs, the tip-toe part being a cause for real alarm.

Questioned this morning about the kitchen trip Buster had replied with exaggerated casualness, "Gee, I'm not sure what I went for, a drink I guess."

Now, from the kitchen window, Mrs. Sterling could see him down by the barn. He had a ladder leaning against the tin roof of the cow shed and seemed to be carrying up pails of sand which he emptied into a wooden box on the roof. The project, whatever it was, must have some connection with the carnival because it had certainly been in his mind at breakfast. And cheap carnivals with side-shows including Frankie The Fire-Eater, Bosco The Crocodile Boy and such like, carried many germs of dangerous ideas.

The egg was crumbly and an awful smell came out

Buster dreamed of the time when the boa constrictor would be big enough to wrap around his arm

Buster completed his job on the cow roof and rushed in the kitchen door, stopping suddenly. "Oh, hello, Mom. I thought you were still upstairs." His energy dissolved into a pseudo listlessness and he slumped in a kitchen chair. "Gee, you've got an awful hot fire in the range haven't you."

Mrs. Sterling watched for some hint of what was up. She replied tartly, "No hotter than usual. What's the matter with with you this morning anyway?"

His eyes were fixed on the big coal range. "Nothing's the matter, Mom, nothing at all. Say, did you know a boa constrictor snake is only a little bitty thing when first born?"

Soft Boiled Snake

HIS mother kept stirring the cherry preserves. "No, I didn't. Why do you ask?"

"Well, I was thinking it would be fun to hatch a boa constrictor egg and train it while it was too little to squeeze things very hard and then sell it to a circus."

Mrs. Sterling laughed and kept on stirring. "Why, of course. It would be nice to have a little boa constrictor around the house. And just where would you find the egg, may I ask?"

Buster shifted uneasily on his chair, then leaned forward eagerly, "Oh, I've got the egg all right. Lura gave it to me last night."

Mrs. Sterling stopped stirring. The spoon dripped red sirup on the hot stove. "Buster Sterling, have you gone stark crazy? Lura who? And if you've got a boa constrictor egg, where is it?"

Buster's face took an aggrieved expression. "Well, gee whiz, there's no need to get so excited. Lura, the Snake Lady, gave it to me last night at the carnival, right out of the snake-pit, and it's up there in the warming oven. All I have to do is bury it in sand for six weeks, but I sure hope you haven't got the stove too hot."

The spoon clattered to the floor as Mrs. Sterling jumped back from the stove. "Buster Sterling, you ought to be whipped. A snake egg in the warming oven." She backed away to the dining room door. "Now you get it out of there this minute, and hurry."

Buster opened the warming oven door a crack and cautiously felt inside. Mrs. Sterling moaned, "Oh, for heaven's sake, hurry. You don't suppose it could have already——"

Buster opened the warming oven all right, just nice and warm, not a bit too hot."

He held the big chalky gray egg in his palm. "I'll bet you never saw a boa constrictor egg before, Mom. Just feel how sort of leathery it is."

His mother backed into the dining room. "Don't you dare come near me with that thing. Lay it in the coal bucket this minute and get out of here while I decide what to do with it."

Two hours later Buster was still hanging around outside a locked kitchen door. Several times his mournful face had peered in the kitchen window but his mother waved him away impatiently. He was surprised when she finally opened the door and said, "Come on in and get that thing."

She seemed to have calmed down quite a lot. She even smiled a little. "I suppose I was silly to get so excited. It's sure not to hatch, but if you want to waste your time trying, go ahead. It's there in the coal bucket where you left it.

BUSTER felt the egg carefully and sighed with relief. "Gee, I was afraid it would get chilled, but it's still a little warm. I'll go bury it on that tin roof."

During the following weeks the entire neighborhood learned that Buster Sterling was trying to hatch a boa constrictor egg. But it hurt his pride the way they snickered, laughed and refused to take it seriously. "Just wait till I show it to 'em wrapped around my arm," he boasted. "Then they won't laugh."

As the end of the six-week incubation period drew near Buster's tension mounted until he could hardly sleep. The sixth week passed but he wasn't too worried because you couldn't expect the American sun to work as fast as it did in Africa. At the end of seven weeks he was growing discouraged though still hopeful, but when eight weeks had gone by he cautiously dug the egg out of the sand box.

It felt hard, but not the kind of hardness it would have if something alive was curled up tight inside. Very carefully he pricked open the tough outer shell, then the inner skin. Some hard crumbly stuff and an awful smell came out and Buster said, "Aw, gee whiz," and blinked hard to keep from crying.

It was nearly three years later, when Buster's snake egg had become a traditional story in the family, that he heard his mother talking to another lady in the front room. He heard the word boa constrictor so of course he listened and his eyes grew wide with delayed understanding when he heard his mother say, "—so while he was outside I baked it as hard as a brick in the oven and he doesn't know about it to this day."

Relic of 1861 Slated To Vanish in Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y., June 7 (U.P.).—The last remaining piece of flagstone walk on this city broad Main st., onto which Abraham Lincoln once stepped from a carriage in 1861, will soon be torn up and discarded.

The walk, in front of Adam, Meldrum and Anderson's men's shop in midtown Buffalo, is destined to disappear in improvements planned for the front of the citys oldest department store. The store will be dressed up with granite, all-glass doors and fluorescent lighting after standing unadorned for 81 years.

Only Four Garden Insects Can Survive Deadly D. D. T.

THERE is small excuse for any home gardener to complain about insect injury to his vegetable garden, since DDT became available. By dusting every week or two with DDT of at least 3 per cent strength, insect injury can be prevented except in the following cases:

Mexican bean beetles, tomato horn worm, and most aphids are immune to DDT.

Cucumbers, melons and squash may be injured by DDT, so it is advisable to use other means to kill the cucumber beetles, which attack all these, and squash bugs and borers, which concentrate on squash plants.

To take care of these exceptions, rotenone will serve. It destroys the Mexican bean beetle, and is deadly to aphids, while even less toxic than DDT to animals.

Some Prefer Older Methods

Some gardeners may prefer to use nicotine sulphate against aphids and some form of arsenic to kill cucumber beetles, which is a particularly difficult pest. While highly poisonous, these older insecticides have been used safely for many years, by many millions of gardeners; and with the usual precautions may still be used.

But the gardener equipped with DDT and rotenone, with suitable equipment for either dusting or spraying his crops when they are threatened, but before damage has been done, will be far better armed to repel insect invasion than he could have been in the prewar era, however extensive his insecticide inventory may have been.

DDT is not so harmless to humans as rotenone. In the form of dust, or as a wettable powder, which is mixed with water for spraying, there is no danger to the user. But residues which might remain on the edible parts of vegetables when they are harvested should be avoided.

Wash All Vegetables

Wash carefully all vegetables which have been sprayed or dusted with it, and do not apply it to leaf crops, or the edible parts of other crops during the two weeks before harvest.

Dust beans with DDT to kill the leaf hoppers, which in many sections are more destructive than bean beetles. DDT injury to vine crops may be avoided by great care. A single puff of dust directed at the base of squash plants weekly, after they had reached their third leaves, is reported to have kept away squash borers, without injury to the vines.

Cast's Sideline Is Bedside Specialties

Gershwin Musical at Mt. Alto Is First to Tour Vet Hospitals

By Richard L. Coe

THE other night we went out with a USO-Camp Shows troupe to Mount Alto Hospital to watch them give a performance of "Girl Crazy."

This is the first straight musical comedy unit to be touring the country's 187 veterans' hospitals. It's been so successful in the first seven weeks that Camp Shows is working on another. "Panama Hattie" will soon be ready to follow the Gershwin musical in its 11-month swing around the Nation's most drama-filled theater circuit.

Because not all patients in these hospitals can get to the recreation halls where the shows are put on, everyone in each cast is a specialist of some sort. Each troupe of 21 players splits into two units to give daytime shows in individual wards. The company's schedule is staggered so that it may be giving ward shows in one hospital by day and appearing in its miniature play in another at night.

Mount Alto Hospital's stage is small, but still large enough to accommodate all the song numbers and comedy routines of "Girl Crazy." The audience was composed of men and women veterans of three wars. In the monotonous routine of hospital life, any change in the set pattern is a real event. Some of the patients made this clear by appearing in suits and dresses instead of typical hospital garments.

As an audience there was nothing extraordinary about them. They laughed at exactly the same things which were funny when the Gershwin brothers wrote their long-lived hit and they hummed the tunes after the curtain fell.

The "Girl Crazy" cast is made up of vaudeville standbys and young hopefuls. Most of them are veterans of overseas touring for USO.

Costumes Colorful

WHILE stage props are held to a minimum and there is no scenery, the costumes are varied and colorful. A four-piece orchestra—piano, sax, drums and accordion—and a hard-worked wardrobe mistress are on tap, but the show itself is as portable as ingenuity and compact luggage can make it.

Probably more than most people, these performers realize that a war never ends. Al Greene, manager of the company, spoke for his fellows when he made just that remark.

As things now stand, Camp Shows is slated to close down at the end of this year. Just what will take its place has not been decided, the Army, the Red Cross or an entirely new setup. But whatever does happen, these shows are needed and, unfortunately, always will be.

While "Girl Crazy" is now the only straight musical comedy on the circuit, there are 22 units touring the hospitals, putting a new show into each one every two weeks. A few weeks ago four top bookers got together in New York, forming a committee to interest the best standard acts in these tours. As a result, over 25 big-time acts now are going direct from places like the Music Hall, Loew's State and F street's Capitol direct to the hospitals.

Production manager is a man well known in Washington—Harry Krivit, formerly with the Capitol Theater. In the last few years Harry has sent over 400 USO shows overseas. In the winter of '44 he got the idea of whittling down popular musical comedies and operettas for the portable treatment. Those overseas units are now finishing up in Japan (they were through last winter in Europe).

38 Units in Pacific

THOUGH Camp Shows sees the end in sight, there are still 535 performers in 38 units in the Pacific. Five more will go out this month.

Planning them means more than whittling them down. The Army will permit no "dirt" in its shows. "Hells" and damns" are definitely verboten.

Rounding up casts is another problem, especially with that "the-war's-over" atmosphere. Of the 7000 performers who've gone overseas in the last three years, many turned up in the endless auditioning sessions Krivit held in all parts of the country. Once in a while, just when a cast looked set, the FBI might likely as not refuse permission for a performer whose background was in any way suspect.

We remarked to Krivit that we'd seen some USO performers overseas who'd have done every one a favor by staying home.

"That's true," he agreed, "but they never got over again. And some of those cases you mention were yanked back in the middle of a tour. All in all, though, they were pretty few. Ninety-five per cent of our people did a fine job and I'm proud of 'em."

Old Vaudevillians

MANAGER Greene, like Krivit, is well known on the vaudeville circuit. He was once conductor over at Loew's Century in Baltimore and in Boston. He also conducted for Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe.

"Girl Crazy's" comics are old vaudevillians. Arthur and Morton Havel and their expert timing of the Gershwin comedy has a lot to do with the small unit's success. Peggy Havel is a comedienne you used to see on the Earle stage, a merry lady with a twinkling eye and dauntless spirit. The Havels' brother-in-law, by the way, is Gene Lockhart of the movies.

Muriel King is doing the Ginger Rogers part and Dan Harden sings "Embraceable You" and the other love tunes with her. Both have been around musical comedy in lesser roles for some time.

But those audiences are the real story. The hospital's special service chief, Marion R. Brownlee, and Miss Agnes Brophy, recreation director, have stories to tell of their men and women as heartrending as any you heard during the war. Being with them for one evening was an experience this reporter won't soon forget. Here's hoping that the Army's special service chief, Gen. Royal Reynolds, will remember them, too, when Camp Shows pass into history. We've an idea he will.

A Changed Man

Hollywood Reclaims Joe Brown

CHICAGO, June 7 (INS).—The "new" Joe E. Brown was back in the embrace of Hollywood today as one of filmdom's top-drawer attractions—all because of the war.

The cavern-mouthed comedian's fans have noted the amazing change which has come over old Joe. Those who know him best attribute it to war-time experiences.

Brown modestly shrugs off all rave notices about the sharper and more subtle treatment of his comedy.

But the fact remains that Joe E. knocked 'em dead for 43 weeks in Chicago as the lovable souse who consorted with a 6-foot white rabbit in the Pulitzer Prize-winning play, "Harvey."

He did it despite doubts expressed by many critics and fair-weather friends. But a new, subtle Joe E. Brown so captivated the crowds that Hollywood has beckoned again after giving him indifferent treatment at war's end.

He signed a contract with an independent producer, Edward Alperson.

The amiable comedian will appear in a serious role, cast as a Protestant minister in the story of a boy and his fighting bulldog. The movie tentatively has been entitled: "The Tender Years."

His choice of the new role exemplifies the change in Joe E. Brown.

Joe's friends say this metamorphosis commenced one somber night in October, 1942, with a drama that had its setting in Long Beach, Calif., and Detroit, Mich.

Brown was backstage in a Detroit theater awaiting his cue when a telephone jangled and a crisp, military voice at a California airport informed him that his son, Capt. Don E. Brown of the United States Army Ferry Command, had been killed in a plane crash.

Joe lost a lot of his buffoonery, his shuffle-foot gait. He reported to the USO and volunteered to go "anywhere, anytime." He dedicated his GI entertainment-tours to his son.

One tour followed another until Joe had made four, had traveled more than 100,000 miles and visited Australia, Guadalcanal, New Guinea, the Philippines, Okinawa, and most of the Pacific islands. He also toured Europe.

Movies Developing 'Political Consciousness'

'Hays Office' Is 25 Years Old

By Ralph Dighton

HOLLYWOOD, June 7 (AP).—When the Motion Picture Association, formerly known as the "Hays Office," celebrates its 25th anniversary June 14, it may mark the end of an era in movie making.

Will Hays, who founded the office, is in retirement. Politico-businessman Eric Johnston is the new boss. The men are as different as night and day, and so is the trend of movies under their direction.

Old-time movie producers were interested in "mass entainment," and mass profits.

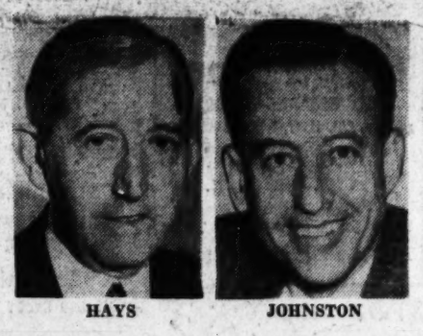
Eric Johnston, when he took over from Hays in September, 1945, brought a new phrase to the entertainment industry. That phrase was "mass enlightenment."

Slowly but surely, the movies are developing a political consciousness. Perhaps this is only a reflection of the turn of mind of the new movie "czar." Or, perhaps a reflection of the turn of mind of certain powerful movie producers.

Some Prefer Hays

THESE producers, however, don't control the industry. Other producers are beginning to express privately a wish that Will Hays were still on the job. While they may not disagree with the current trend toward "social responsibility" under Johnston, they emphatically dislike talking about it.

They liked the way Will Hays got results. No job was too small for Hays, if it helped protect the name and the financial interests of Hollywood. Hays was a practical politician. Doug Fairbanks, sr., called Hays a "fixer." Johnston is a political theorist and an excellent public speaker. Hays, while he spoke long and often, made a point of saying little.



HAYS

JOHNSTON

Johnston is a valuable front man. Hays' value lay behind the scenes.

When Hays established his little liaison bureau in New York in 1922, he was fresh from the Postmaster Generalship. His primary function was as a lobbyist and trouble shooter.

'Results' His Specialty

HAYS never has said, and few people ever will know, just how he accomplished his results. But results were his specialty. That's why he lasted more than two decades in a job which Johnston already may be finding uncomfortable.

Only once did Hays fumble a major controversy. In 1923, when he was fairly new in the job, he lifted the screen suspension of Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, who had been involved in the scandal of actress Virginia Rappe's death. Reinstatement brought protests from women's organizations. The Ohio Department of Education warned that Arbuckle films would not be permitted in that State. Arbuckle died soon afterward without getting back on the screen.

Mostly, Hays' work was under cover. Some of his work began to come out in the open, however, when reform elements started exerting pressure to clean up the movies. Faced with a demand for State or Federal regulation, the industry decided to regulate itself.

Morals Code

THE Hays Office established a morals code, and won a nickname as the "vice squad of the film industry." To retain membership in the association, producers had to submit their movies to the Hays Office for approval. Occasionally producers have flouted the code and as a result of the publicity have made a lot of money. But generally they have upheld the code because they believe it is the best way of avoiding outside censorship.

During the war years, movie bigwigs began to feel a need for a man of great executive ability because they foresaw four major peacetime problems. Hays' health was beginning to break. Johnston was hired.

Johnston had many qualifications for the movie job, but among the best was his flair for capturing public imagination with a new twist on an old idea.

Films Influential

YEARS ago, after the need for a morals code arose, it became apparent that movies could influence people as well as entertain them. It remained for Johnston

Christmas Debut

Movies Sign Tom Thumb As a 'Star'

HOLLYWOOD, June 7 (AP).—Something new in animation movies is scheduled for release around Christmas, 1948. Principal character is a 5-inch puppet, "Tom Thumb," who will appear on the screen with live actors and animals and animated toys.

Puppetoon Producer George Pal, naturalized Hungarian, is Tom Thumb's brain-father. The movie will run full-length (90 minutes), because Pal figures the shorts he has been making for years "can't be improved."

Pal, who admits he seldom makes any money on shorts, doesn't know whether the full-length will make money either. "But it would," he smiles wistfully, "be nice for a change."

Pal makes his money on toys patterned after his puppets, and on comic books. And, of course, Tom Thumb will be on the store counters for the 1948 Christmas shopping rush.

Practically a whole new puppet has to be assembled for Tom Thumb to walk two steps. A separate picture is taken of each tiny movement, then the series of pictures is photographed consecutively.

Yankee Pranksters Abroad

You Can't Faze a Jap With a Radio Reptile

By John Crosby

THE impact of American culture abroad was manifest, not necessarily benevolently, twice within a week. In Tokyo, the armed Forces Radio Service invented a sea serpent which caused a small panic. In Moscow, the Russian radio dipped one toe into commercial radio.

The Tokyo foolishness was in the classic American tradition of practical jokes, which are inclined to be ponderous. It was a hot foot on a massive scale, a demonstration of minimal imagination and a total lack of common sense. The AFRS station, WVTR, broadcast a series of bulletins announcing that a 20-foot high monster was advancing into the center of town, small-arms fire just bouncing off its thick hide.

The most curious fact about the resultant uproar, it seems to me, is that panic appears to have stricken the American and British occupation authorities more severly than it did the Japanese. Reporters dashed around the city trying to get eyewitness stories. American wives were in tears as their husbands went off to fight the serpent. American M. P.'s rode off in all directions, armed to the teeth. Most Japanese apparently just telephoned to find out if it were true.

This, I think, is not so much a reflection on the credulity of occidentals as a testimonial to the reliability of their own broadcasters. The American networks, it must be admitted, fell flat on their faces several times during the war with false news flashes; nevertheless, in general, anything billed as news on the American air is pretty well grounded in fact.

The Japanese on the other hand, heard some very strange utterances over their own radio during the war and presumably adopted a more cynical attitude toward radio news. The sea serpent hoax won't increase their respect either for radio or for the occupation authorities.

Any comparison with Orson Welles' Martian invasion over CBS in 1938 is fairly remote and a little unfair to Welles. After all, Welles was only trying to interject some excitement into the dramatization of a well known novel, "The War of the Worlds," by that other Wells—H. G. Twice during the broadcast—in the beginning and in the middle—it was announced that the broadcast was fiction and Mr. Welles was as surprised as anyone when he discovered that he had scared the pants off a good part of the country. It may have been foolish but it wasn't deliberate.

As for the Moscow commercials, the most startling aspect of that capitalist innovation was that the listeners asked for more.

The Russians employed what might be described as the Mary Margaret McBride technique. Mary Margaret usually gets so wrapped up in her guests and her own monologue that she forgets all about the commercials until the last three minutes of play. Then everything pours out at once—the furniture polish, the delicious muffin flour, the vegetable of the week.

The Russians did the same thing. It was eight straight minutes of solid commercial, consisting chiefly of factual announcements of goods and services and where they could be obtained. The only resemblance to American commercials was one firm which repeated its address and telephone number.

That shows which way the wind is blowing, comrade. Next thing you know they'll be repeating the firm name 15 times in half a minute. As Fred Allen commented the other night: "Wait till they start spelling those Russian names backwards."

NBC was televising a Giants night game last year when the director, a sentimental fellow who obviously doesn't belong in this business at all, called on the cameras to take a close-up of the moon. It looked very nice, too. The announcer, bewildered but resourceful, spouted poetry for 30 seconds.

Breaks 'Longest Run' Record Next Saturday

'Life With Father' Goes On

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP).—When the curtain rises at the Bijou Theater next Saturday evening, "Life With Father," by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, will have become the longest running production in the history of the Broadway stage.

The runner-up, of course, is "Tobacco Road," whose mark of 3182 performances will be topped that evening, making it 3183 for the new champ.

Other front runners in the theatrical marathon are "Abie's Irish Rose," which played 2327 times; "Oklahoma!" with 1804 performances as of this evening and a continuing contender; "Arsenic and Old Lace," with 1444; "Helzapoppin," 1404; "Voice of the Turtle," 1325 and also still running; "Angel Street," 1295; "Lightnin'," 1291, and "Harvey," with 1110 and the end nowhere in sight.

Broadway will be making quite a to-do over the occasion, with proclamations expected to be issued from City Hall. Co-author Howard Lindsay, who played "Father" for 1618 performances until he grew tired back in June, 1944, will step back into his old role for two weeks beginning on the night of the record-busting, as will his wife, Dorothy Stickney, who also appeared in the original production 1593 times before she withdrew as "Mother," or "Vinnie," as the role is more familiarly referred to.

LARRY ROBINSON (Today)

. . . He wore these in 1939

If the play runs much longer, it will need a "Peter Pan" to play the part of Harlan. There have been 10 Harlans who played the role in New York until they outgrew it. The first Harlan was Larry Robinson, in 1939. He got too big for his britches in less than a year. (See photo.)

The delightful comedy distilled by Lindsay and Crouse from the amusing reminiscent sketches of his father written by Clarence Day will have a successor in swift order. Both Lindsay and Crouse are well along with their sequel, to be called, of course, "Life With Mother," which if successful should be a likely legitimate theater parallel for the screen's "Andy Hardy" series.

Another topical note about this hardy perennial: It will move from the tiny Bijou Theater shortly to the comparatively huge Alvin Theater, where prices will be reduced to a point which should permit folks with movie-style budgets to attend.

"Life With Father" already has been filmed and is awaiting a release date; probably this fall. William Powell is the cinema "Father."

'Am I Boring You?' Asks David

Niven of the Waldorf Delivered the Laundry!

By Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 7.—Had I known more of David Niven's background when I invited him to dinner recently I wouldn't have expected him to be on time. He wasn't. He was a full half hour late.

David isn't a conventional fellow.

In private life he's the soul of gentility, having the manners of an English lord — where manners are required. Under different circumstances he becomes as earthy as a sailor. He is not famous for inhibitions.

"Tell Hedda about the time you delivered laundry in New York," said another dinner guest to David.

"O, that," said Niven. "I was graduated from Sandhurst and entered the British army as an officer. Subsequently I found myself in Malta. Here I fell in with a wonderful fellow by the name of Mike Trubshawe who was not overburdened with respect for army rules. He's the fellow whose name I work into all my pictures. It's a sort of memorial to Mike, who's now running a pub in England.

"In 'Wuthering Heights' I had a most difficult time. But I finally got the name sound-tracked in a scene where a dog leaps upon Merle Oberon. I said, 'Down, Trubshawe, down!' Am I boring you?" asked David.

At the Waldorf

"You were going to tell us about delivering laundry in New York," said I.

"O, yes," said David. "When I resigned from the Army I met a pal who was leaving for Canada the next day. He said: 'Come along with me. I'll buy you a round trip ticket.' It sounded like a good idea, so I went to Canada, cashed in my return ticket, and remained.

"Eventually I moved down to New York. Since I could scarcely pay my bills, it occurred to me that I might just as well move into the Waldorf. I did. I put up a good front and soon was having everything—even postage stamps—put on the bill. Then one day I returned to the hotel and found a delegation of Chinese waiting for me in the lobby.

"The clerk called me over, gave me that suspicious look, and asked, 'Now, why should these Chinese be wanting you?' Suddenly I had a brain wave and remembered that Elsa Maxwell was living in the hotel, too. So I said, 'Elsa Maxwell—she's having a scavenger hunt.'

"Then I got the Chinese up to my room and we went into a conference over a matter of $4.90 that I owed for shirt laundry. I agreed to work the bill out. That's how I happened to start delivering laundry. I could borrow anything from my New York friends—except money. I didn't want them to know I was broke. So I called up a pal, borrowed his Rolls Royce and chauffeur, and we delivered the laundry. The chauffeur was completely disgusted.

"I decided to take a little rest. I landed in Panama, from where I was to leave by steamer for Norway.

"Unfortunately, I fell in with a group of sailors. We had a splendid evening, except they put me on the wrong boat. I woke up the next morning bound for San Francisco. When I landed there I called up a girl I'd met in England. She lived in Santa Barbara, and suggested that I visit her family. 'Santa Barbara,' said she, 'is just down the road.' I had no conception of distance in America, so I started hitch-hiking. It took me two days to make Santa Barbara.

"The Bounty"

"One day I discovered a British warship in the harbor. Some of my pals from England were aboard. They asked me to join them for a little farewell party, which I did. I went to sleep; and when I woke up the ship was in full sail. I was called to the admiral's quarters—still in my dinner jacket—for a little conversation. Suddenly a sailor entered and said, 'I wish to report, sir, that we've sighted the Bounty.' I'd just finished reading 'Mutiny on the Bounty,' so naturally I thought these fellows were nuts. The Bounty hadn't been seen in a hundred years or more.

I went to the porthole, peeped out, and lo, there was the Bounty. I said to myself: 'This is it. You've finally blown your topper.' I'm sure this is boring you."

I said I couldn't be more interested.

"Well, it was true," said David. "Metro, unknown to me, had just started shooting the picture 'Mutiny on the Bounty,' and the replica of the old ship had been sent to sea to meet the modern British battleship as a publicity stunt.

"The admiral told me this was where I got off. I was lowered into the Bounty—still wearing my dinner jacket, mind you—in a cargo net. Frank Lloyd and Bob Montgomery brought me back to Hollywood, and with them I sailed right thru the gates of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

War Provided Background For C. U. Play

John McGiver's new play "All Gaul Is Divided" will be the first play of Catholic University's Playwrighting Festival. It will open Sunday, June 22, for a three-week run.

A graduate student in Walter Kerr's playwrighting course, McGiver is now studying for his MFA degree. He has already been awarded a BA at Fordham and an MA at Columbia. He has an extensive background as a writer.

While at Fordham he wrote two one-act prize-winning plays—"Beer and Skittles" and appropriately enough, "The Playwright." In his senior year he was drama editor of The Ram, the university's noted publication. He has authored several successful radio scripts and is a regular contributor to periodicals and digests, his most recent work appearing in The Catholic Digest.

I and E in Paris

During the war he was Captain McGiver of the famous Seventh Armored Division and saw action in France, Belgium, Holland and Germany.

Subsequent to the cessation of hostilities he was assigned to the information and education branch of the Army, in Paris. He was editor-in-chief of the I and E publication for European command schools. His experiences while in France have provided much of the background for his new play.

In addtiion to his work as a writer, McGiver has had extensive experience as both a director and actor. During the past year he has appeared in five Catholic University productions. Previous to the war he was an actor-director in New York's Irish Repertory Theater and worked with such outstanding notables as Leslie Howard, Augustine Duncan and the Abbey Theater director, P. Augustis Keogh.

Nolan Cast as Father

Lloyd Nolan has been cast as the father in Twentieth Century-Fox's film version of "Green Grass of Wyoming," the Mary O'Hara best-seller. Previously announced for important roles in the production were Peggy Cummings and Bury Ives. This is the third of the Mary O'Hara outdoor romances to be filmed by the studio. Others were "My Friend Flicka" and "Thunderhead, Son of Flicka."

to push the idea that movies could influence nations.

"The motion picture, prudently and wisely used," says Johnston, "should be one of the most potent forces for promoting friendship and understanding among nations."

Industry spokesmen believe the movies are on the threshold of a new era. "We must change," they say, "if we are to survive." Television, third-dimension screens and new color processes will mean better movies. As movies improve, these spokesmen say, their influence will increase. An over-all production code, regulating the ideological content as well as the moral content of movies may have to be devised. Critics abroad already have called for some sort of United Nations control over movies made in one country and exhibited in another.

different from that of Flo Ziegfeld on Fanny Brice, after Ziegfeld dredged Miss Brice out of burlesque.

Burrows has succeeded in softening some of her bleaker outlines and, more importantly, in demonstrating that the Davis talent consists of something more than the ability to open her mouth a great distance and make loud noises.

The tortuous plots that used to afflict the show have been straightened out, the characters have been sharpened and a good deal of pleasant satire has been pumped into the middle of the show, once occupied exclusively by dim jokes and basket-weaving.

Below you'll find the 30-cent trial size of the new Joan Davis show; you can get the big economy bottle by tuning in to CBS-WTOP at 8:30 p. m. Mondays.

Miss Davis, who is reading a movie fan magazine at the hairdresser ("Is Trigger Tired of Doing Horse Parts?"), falls asleep under the dryer and dreams of being a movie star.

"What's my schedule?" she asks her secretary.

"Well, at 2 o'clock you go before the camera. At 3 o'clock, you pose for the Esquire calendar. And at 12 o'clock—just 10 minutes from now—you're getting married."

"To whom?"

Miss Davis mulls over the name of the groom with some curiosity, wondering if she's ever met him. Then: "Where am I getting married—the Bowl again?"

"Oh no. We thought you'd like a few close friends this time. So the studio has built a replica of Yankee Stadium. There'll be a hundred gold pianos all played by Jose Iturbi. Your dress will be by Adrian, your train by Santa Fe, and the sun will appear by special permission of David O. Selznick."

Well, satirizing the movies has been done so often it may have lost some of its point, but it's certainly a step in the right direction.

Dr. Kindler to Direct Virginia Festival

IF you're headed down Virginia way this coming weekend, you might do well to look in on the first Virginia Music Festival at Charlottesville, in Scott Stadium, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. Three concerts will be played by the National Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the orchestra and musical director of the festival.

Mona Paulee, mezzo soprano of the Met, will sing the Brahms Alto Rhapsody with the orchestra and the male glee club of the University of Virginia at the opening concert on Friday, June 13.

Saturday, John Powell, native Virginian, will be soloist, playing his own Negro Rhapsody; Dr. Kindler will present an all-orchestral program on Sunday and will feature Brahms First and Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and an American work, "Frontiers" by Paul Creston. A special shell for the orchestra has been erected in Scott Stadium and there will be a seating capacity for 10,000 people. All concerts are to be held at 8:30 p. m. Eastern Standard Time.

Buses to Watergate

MUSIC lovers planning to attend the National Symphony Orchestra Watergate Concerts this summer won't have to walk from the end of the car line down to the Potomac. Capital Transit Co. buses will run direct to the Watergate, as they did before the war.

Opening concert, Thursday, June 19, features Mona Paulee, as soloist with Richard Bales on the podium. Dr. Kindler will conduct the concert on Sunday with Sanroma, as piano soloist. Todd Duncan, Negro baritone, will be guest artist with Bales conducting on Tuesday, June 24. Concerts will be held at 8:30 p. m. on Thursday, Sunday and Tuesday.

Draper-Adler Recital

PAUL DRAPER, tap dancer and Larry Adler, harmonica virtuoso, have been scheduled by the Dorsey Concert Bureau for next winter. The Draper and Adler recital will be a special nonseries attraction. The other 15 events have been grouped into three series of five events each.

Two of the series will be given on Sunday at 4 p. m. in Constitution Hall. The first, all instrumental, will include recitals by Zino Francescatti and Fritz Kreisler, violinists, and by Marylia Jonas, Robert Casadesus and Vronsky and Babin, pianists.

The second Sunday series will be all vocal, offering recitals by Jussi Bjoerling, tenor, Eleanor Steber and Patrice Munsel, sopranos; and Ezio Pinza, basso, all of the Metropolitan, as well as the eighteenth consecutive annual local concert of the original Don Cossack Chorus and dancers.

The third series of five events will be mixed vocal and instrumental and will be given on week day evenings at 8:30 p. m. Included will be recitals by James Melton, tenor, and Lotte Lehmann, soprano; Artur Rubinstein and Valadimir Horowitz, pianists, and Yehudi Menuhin, violinists—
Betsey Winter.

No Cinch to Disc

Show Album Hard to Wax For Jockeys

By Jack Gaver

NEW YORK, May 17 (U.P.).—You might think that putting out one of those albums of recordings of a Broadway musical's score, utilizing principals, chorus and orchestra thoroughly familiar with the material, would be a cinch job, but it isn't. It's about as basic and difficult as the original task of bringing the show to the stage.

For one thing, the arrangements that you hear played in the theater for performances aren't quite right. Not only do deletions have to be made to tighten the score into album dimensions, but new twists of phrasing are added by the recording experts to make more effective listening.

Oberstein, who is in charge of Popular Artists and Repertoire, and his staff have done one of the outstanding jobs in the show album field with "Brigadoon," the Scottish fantasy at the Ziegfeld Theater.

The RCA-Victor people put the "Brigadoon" score on five 10-inch records (ten sides) and got in just about everything.

Naughty Song Dropped

"We did have to drop one of Pamela Britton's comedy songs," Oberstein said. "Too naughty for the record trade. On another of her songs we had to change the punch line for the same reason." Otherwise the album follows the show sequence in its presentation of the songs and it isn't difficult to catch the thread of the story even though no dialogue is used, as has been done in some albums recently.

"As far as I'm concerned, the spoken word on records is murder," said Oberstein. "I want these records to be played by the disc jockeys and in the jukes. You can imagine how much of a play those outlets would give records messed up with occasional dialogue."

Oberstein prepared for the recording job by sitting through three performances in the pit with the orchestra. He timed the musical numbers. He and Russ Case, RCA-Victor musical director, blocked out the parts they wanted and the changes in arrangements. The show's orchestra was augmented with cello and bass viols to help out with bagpipe effects. The song, "Come to Me, Bend to Me," a very slow waltz that is effective on the stage because it is accompanied by dancing, had to be stepped up a bit in tempo to prevent it from sounding dreary on a record. The leading man, baritone David Brooks, had to be toned down so his powerful voice didn't drown out everyone.

Around the Bridge Table

Capital's Steinberg Becomes Life Master

By Marian H. Barre

NOT since Al Roth left town has Washington had a "Life Master." Now it has one!

He is Dr. A. J. Steinberg, long the city's leading player, who joined the hall of fame via the Masters Individual. Official announcement of his new status was published in the American Contract Bridge League Bulletin. The doctor became Life Master 82. In all these United States just 88 persons have attained that ultimate distinction.

A former Washingtonian also made the grade recently. He is S. Garton Churchill, now No. 76 among the immortals. Stationed here during the war, "Church" was a colorful player who always injected imagination into his bidding. "Paint a picture of your hand for your partner," was the Churchillian formula.

A fifth interest in the Cavalier team trophy came back to the District when Leroy Thurtell's intercity lineup captured the championship at Virginia Beach last Sunday. Other members of the fivesome were Miles of Norfolk, Folline of Richmond, and Fisher and Shapiro of Baltimore.

Another local win was in men's pairs. Dr. "Al" O'Donnell led this field, paired with Louis Scarf of New York. Former buddies, the two had not met in 16 years. (Dr. O'Donnell, incidentally, is the current National Press Club bridge champ.) Men's and women's pairs were played as one game but with separate tops. On the distaff side, Mrs. John Darsey and Miss Kathleen McNutt, both of this city, were runnersup to Mrs. Leon Landauer, Norfolk, and Mrs. J. E. Folline.

Miss McNutt, playing with J. G. Stone, also made the honor list in the mixed game, which was won by Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Johnson of Spartanburg, S. C.

Other Capitalites attending the Virginia Beach tourney included Dr. and Mrs. Gregg Custis, Dr. and Mrs. J. V. Waits, Mr. and Mrs. "Bill" Million, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Poissant, John Darsey and J. J. Parish.

Mrs. Lazard Repeats

THE McDonnell Cup series in the Agriculture Bridge Club ended May 28 in a "decimal point finish" between Mrs. James Lazard and Dr. C. C. McDonnell, the former having an average percentage of 55.73 while the trophy donor scored 55.50. It was a repeat triumph for Mrs. Lazard, who won the championship once before.

During the summer, Agriculture Club games on second and fourth Wednesdays will be open to members' friends. They will continue to be held at Euclid Studios.

Mrs. Ray Hackett, new president of the Women's Auxiliary of the Washington Bridge League, recently returned from a visit to Chicago, having been elected during her absence. Confronted by an accumulation of unfinished business, Mrs. Hackett called a meeting of all new officers on June 12 at Deal Beach, Va., where they will be guests of the treasurer, Mrs. Frank Summy.

A meeting of the full executive committee will be called immediately following the appointment of committee chairmen.

Among new senior masters announced by the ACBL is Mrs. William McIntyre of this city. Possession of 150 or more national points are required for this classification. The name of Mrs. J. G. Seabourne, also of Washington, is included in the list of masters, for which a minimum of 10 points is necessary.

2 Championships On

TWO annual championships started last week but still hanging fire are the Washington Bridge League's team of four match and the Federal Bridge League's three-team playoff for the Luther Stewart Trophy. The former series started June 4 and will be concluded June 18, at Hotel Burlington, while the Federal match, which began June 3, will end Tuesday.

On June 17, selected Federal foursomes will meet an equal number of teams in the Maryland Bridge League in a series of challenge matches. A trophy for this event has been donated by James G. Stone. The committee in charge comprises J. D. Boyd, Miller Roberts and Col. H. J. Vandersluis.

Master point winners in the Federal's contest of May 27 were as follows:

Section A, north-south, first, G. L. Dickerman and William Poissant; second, Mrs. K. Moorman and Miller Roberts; east-west, First, Mrs. J. R. Belt-Capt. R. McGhee; second, Mrs. C. W. Zimmer-R. Mullen.

In section B, Mrs. P. E. Henninger won with her houseguest from New York, Miss J. Medor, the other position going to S. A. Perrine and J. J. Parish. Mrs. Marianne Boschan-Mrs. Bernard Rosson; Col. M. J. Haas-E. Eaton, were runners-up.

Section C went to Col. and Mrs. J. T. Willis and Mrs. R. Corwin-Mark Kurtz; P. Justice-A. E. Camire and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Itkin took seconds. This section is a new feature in Federal games. Only non-masters may play it, so the duplicate tyro is protected from the harrowing tactics often employed against inexperienced teams.

The Capital City Chess Club's master-point monthly will be held at 8 p. m. next Saturday in Hotel Gordon. As scores in these events are not counted in the plaque series, that leaves only two games before the series' conclusion June 28. It would be difficult to overcome Mrs. John Fletcher's heavy lead.

Guest Conductor Here on July 15

FRANCIS MADEIRA will conduct the National Symphony concert July 15 when George Bolet plays the Grieg piano concerto. The guest conductor is director of the Rhode Island Symphony Orchestra and assistant professor of music at Brown University.

Cyril Smith to Record Concerts for Columbia

BRITISH pianist Cyril Smith makes his Columbia records debut with Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, with George Stokowski and the Hollywood Bowl Symphony under Stokowski have recorded Virgil Thomson's "The Plow That Broke the Plains" on two large records for a new Victor album.

Record Player

Brandenburg Bach Answers The Critics

By Paul Hume

Bach: Brandenburg Concertos No. 2 and 5. Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky. Victor 1118. $4.85.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has for several seasons played pre-Tanglewood Festivals of Bach and Mozart. During their recording sessions in the shed they waxed all six of the Brandenburgs, and we are now given the second and fifth, having had three and four some time ago.

Following my review of the two earlier releases, many asked me if I did not think that the full string section of the modern orchestra was too large for these works, and didn't I have any of the purist in me. Sure I have. And these records were made by a greatly reduced string section, so that they are entirely in keeping with the physical requirements suggested in Bach's writing.

I do not find Koussevitsky's style in these in any way a violation of Bach's spirit as I understand that spirit. There is a fine feeling for the shape of phrases, and a musicianly sense of tempos. The various contrapuntal lines speak with utmost clarity, and I ask no more of anyone in the Brandenburgs.

Furthermore the sound of the instruments in the Boston Symphony is of such sensuous beauty as to enhance anything they play. This is as true of Bach as of Debussy. In these records they are joined by Lukas Foss, pianist, while their regular first trumpet, Roger Voisin, does miracles with the high part assigned him in the second concerto.

I think Rudolf Serkin a far greater pianist than Foss, and the long cadenza of the D major concerto is less exciting and intense in this new set than in the older Busch recordings. Nevertheless on the whole I prefer the new Victor recordings. The engineering is practically perfect and the surfaces, for a change, excellent.

Chopin: Les Sylphides. Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler. Victor 1119. $3.85.

For many balletomanes, there is only one deity and its name is Sylphides. Even lacking so high a degree of adoration for the score, it is easy to prophesy wide sales for this album. The music is by Chopin, and includes many of his greatest favorites; the orchestra, the Boston Pops, with its usual fine fidelity in recording, and the performance remarkably sensitive.

The old version by the London Philharmonic Orchestra has been difficult to obtain and there are many who have long awaited this new release. I wish that Victor had seen fit to give us the new arrangement of this music by Benjamin Britten, for it far outreaches the present version by Anderson and Bodge. However, this is Sylphides as it is known to thousands of ballet and music lovers. Those who like it will ask nothing more. Surfaces are good.

Brahms: Waltzes. Vronsky and Babin, duo-pianists. Columbia 17407. $1.05.

Brahms was one of those composers for whom the waltz was a medium of great expressiveness. We find him writing in this medium for singing, playing, pianos and violin. Columbia employs its outstanding piano team to give us five of the waltzes of Opus 39 for two pianos.

We don't really know why they didn't have Vronsky and Babin play the whole sixteen and put them into an album. Musically they are delightful, and the playing is perfect for Brahms waltzes. The tone of the two instruments is fine, the surfaces quiet. More of these will be gladly received.

* * * *

Weill: Street Scene—Selections. Polyna Stoska, Ann Jeffreys, Brian Sullivan, with orchestra under Maurice Abravanel. Columbia 683.

Using members of the Broadway production of "Street Scene," Columbia has done a good job of transferring the show to discs. There is a beautiful sound to the singing in this set, with Polyna Stoska displaying one of the most beautiful opera sopranos now in this country. She is a fine musician, and it shows even as she sings this lighter fare.

All the diction is fine, and the album, being considerably condensed from the whole show, gives you a real sense of the whole production. Engineering and surfaces fine.

Brooklyn Organizing Symphony Orchestra

New York, June 7 (U.P.).—Brooklyn is the latest community to set up its own symphony orchestra.

Its sponsors, after a thorough canvass, feel assured of public support, and also believe that the project can be managed without a deficit, after the first season or two.

The budget for the first year has been set at $500,000, with a deficit of not more than $50,000 expected. Tickets are being offered for subscription at $2, $1.50 and $1, with more than half of the seats selling at $1. Musicians are being auditioned by Dr. Herbert Zipper, conductor, for an orchestra of 85.

Keynote to Add Classical Music

KEYNOTE Records, says President John Hammond, will add classical music and children's pieces to its releases. Igor Stravinsky, under an exclusive recording contract, will do his "Dunbarton Oaks" as his first recording, with release scheduled this month. The ABC's Fine Arts Quartet has also been signed and its first offering will be Shostakovich's Third String Quartet.

Bill Gottlieb's Swing Sessions

Critics Admit Mel Torme Is 'In'

NEW YORK, June 7.—The kid was plenty cocky at his Copacabana opening. He rubbed Earl Wilson of The Post the wrong way. Bob Sylvester of the News, too. But no doubt about it, Mel Torme was IN. Even Wilson and Sylvester had to admit it. The smallish 22-year-old with the blond cowlick could sing like crazy.

For months before, Torme's (pronounced Tormay's) tireless press agent had been filling the Broadway air with flack. Through records, every hip disc jockey, every swing critic had long since been sold on "The Velvet Fog." Opening night, these influential fans jammed one side of the Copa, practically on each other's laps. They nearly outpulled the conventional nite-lifers who had come to see top-billed comedienne Mitzi Green.

What the writers and spielers heard that evening surpassed anything they could remember from his Musicraft biscuits. The loudspeakers were still vibrating from Torme's husky whispering when they began to plan "Torme Days" for their radio stations and Velvet Fog layouts for their magazines.

Mel's isn't a big, rich voice. It's small, slightly nasal, and with a rough edge. It's what he did with it when he sang tunes like "September Song." This former musician, former arranger had startling musical ideas with a display of control and mike technique that turned these ideas into skin-tinglers. None realized it more than the musicians accompanying Torme. When not playing they gaped as Mel flew off on a break, swooped through a spectacular variation and returned with an on-the-button landing.

Even Mitzi's crowd got the idea. It was the greatest thing since a promising youngster named Frank Sinatra did the same trick at the same club, about four years ago.

Last February 9, this column predicted Mel Torme would be the singing sensation of the year. There's still Frankie Laine and Buddy Clark to think about. But after looking over the last week, it's apparent the prediction is all but fulfilled.

LOCAL LORE (D. C. DEPT.): Only bad date on his recent successful tour was, according to Harry James, the one in Washington . . . The soliloquies recorded by the late jazz giant, Jelly Roll Morton, for the Library of Congress will be released commercially by Circle records. The series has Jelly Roll playing the piano and telling in his colorful language the history of jazz. Other folk discs cut at the Library are public property; but these have a copyright angle that made the masters the property of Jelly Roll's heirs and subject to commercial sale. . . . The Daughters of the American Revolution keynoted their recent executive session with the words: "If our country ever needed to put its accent on Americanism, it is now," whereupon they voted to continue to ban all but white performers from using Constitution Hall.

CONTINENTAL Record's singing star, former G-Man Joe Dosh, has scored on his WINX disc-jockey show, 1 to 4 p. m. daily . . . Jerry Rhea, former Washingtonian, who is Duke Ellington's personal assistant, has been traveling to D. C. weekly to assist Willis Conover on a WWDC show (Sundays from 1 to 2 a. m.) devoted to the history of the Duke. Ellington is due here this week.

QUARTER NOTES: The music biz slump has finally hit even the big record companies, though the huge backlog of orders will still make 1947 the biggest year ever. Over 400 million platters will be sold as against 10 million in 1932! . . . National Speedboat Champion Guy Lombardo is cutting a month off his summer stint at the Waldorf to race his craft . . . Transplanting old species of corn has proved so phenomenally successful in the case of Al Jolson that promoters are scurrying to find others that can be nurtured back to producing golden kernels. First to get the big treatment will be Ted Lewis, followed by Harry Richman. Record companies have already begun to press albums from their old masters.

RECORDS BRIEFS: Harry James slightly stiff version of "Moten Swing" (Columbia) is moten but not molten . . . A terrif intro by a baritone sax helps make a click of Benny Goodman's "I Want To Be Loved" (Capitol) . . . "Chi-Baba, Chi-Baba" was just another highly pressured tune to me 'til I heard Peggy Lee's rhythmic treatment

St. Louis Opera And Other Concerts

ST. LOUIS' Municipal Opera opens at Forest Park June 5 . . . Robin Hood Dell concerts begin in Philadelphia June 23 . . . Starting the middle of July, the Boston Symphony will give 12 concerts at Tanglewood, with Koussevitzky, Bernstein and Shaw conducting . . . Jacob's Pillow, in the Berkshires, offers dances July 25 and 26; opera, August 1 and 8 . . . The third Saratoga Spa Festival opens September 6.

Sails for Italy

New York, June 7.—Brooks McCormack, American tenor, has left for Italy to appear in opera this summer. It is claimed for McCormack that he can sing a high A-flat above high C, several tones above most coloratura sopranos, and do it in full voice, not falsetto. He has been heard with the Cincinnati Summer Opera, the Chicago Opera, the Central City opera festival in Colorado and the National Opera in Mexico City.

MEL TORME
. . . Husky whispering

(Capitol) . . . Enric Madriguera, who's introduced more Latin American hits than anyone else, has waxed a novelty from Cuba, "The Cowbell Song" (National). Wife Pat Gilmore sings the English translation . . . Sonny Terry, blind harmonica player who's a hit in "Finian's Rainbow," has an eerie novelty in "Whoopin' The Blues" (Capitol) . . . Best dance bet of the week: Charlie Spivak's "There's That Lonely Feeling Again" (Victor) . . . Freddy Martin continues to capitalize on the Latin craze with "Lolita Lopez" and "Come To the Mardi Gras" (Victor) . . . The King Cole Trio are impeccable as usual in "Can You Look Me In The Eyes."

Today's Highlights

Comedy Dividend by Theater Guild

THE "Theater Guild of the Air," which has just won a Billboard Magazine poll citation for best dramatic series on the air, seems as loath to leave its audience as the audience is to be left, so United States Steel is declaring a dividend of four light comedies. The first of these extra "Theater Guild" sessions will be aired tonight at 10 over WMAL-ABC with Basil Rathbone and Pamela Brown starring in "A Church Mouse."

Three summer replacement drama series begin today. Lassie, handsome movie collie, goes on the air at 3 p. m. over WMAL-ABC. The "Silver Theater," which replaces "Ozzie and Harriet," opens with "Guardian Angel" at 6 over WTOP-CBS with Conrad Nagel as emcee. At 7:30 over WRC-NBC, "Rogue's Gallery" substitutes for Alice Faye and Phil Harris. Barry Sullivan stars in the mystery series.

Ace Script-Writers Spill Their 'Secrets'

"Youth Asks the Government" was popping with prize-winning spontaneity even on its first broadcast. John Edwards, seated at head of table, acts as moderator between the teen-age panel and Representative Mike Monroney, who sits at his right

By Sonia Stein

THERE is a rule for writing radio scripts:

Tell 'em what you are going to tell 'em.

Tell 'em.

Tell 'em what you told 'em.

But, alas, there is no rule for writing a prize-winning script. The men responsible for three locally written or produced shows which have won laurels plead ignorance of any magic rules, but being cooperative—and by profession articulate—they make a brave try.

Lou Hazam, whose weekly series on WRC-NBC, "Home Is What You Make It," recently won an Ohio State University Institute for Education by Radio award, probably has the most reason to know what makes his shows successful. Hazam does not write under the white heat of inspiration but purely on assignment.

The Saturday morning series is supposed to be of specific interest to women and includes such subjects as food, clothing, shelter, child training.

Anatomical Twist

HAZAM is often given an assignment like "The Daily Problem of Food." Turning this into something people will listen to is Hazam's problem, and he meets it with astonishing success. He sees no reason why the techniques used on commercial programs—Jack Benny, Bob Hope et al—cannot be used for sustaining shows.

He mulls the material over until he finds just the right format for the particular subject in hand. "The Daily Problem of Food" got a fantasy treatment—a trip inside Mr. Jones.

Some subjects, alcoholism for example, take well to straightforward forum discussions. What could have been a stultifying treatise on child training was turned into an out-and-out romp, as amusing as any comedy show. A Hazam script on teen-agers used a jukebox number to tee off each problem. A coming program on contributions of the West Indies to American civilization will homogenize the dull textbook listings of agricultural products and what not by incorporating them into calypso songs!

Heavy on Research

IT IS these little departures from the norm that make the show vivid and listenable as well as informative.

Hazam also stresses the ability to "keep the seat of the pants applied to the seat of the chair until finished," though he makes no claims to originality on the maxim.

There is more than just writing to this job, too. Hazam reads an average of four books a week and has a researcher in New York preparing material for every program. Once he has the background on the subject, it's a question of finding the "acute moment" in a man's life, or the most forceful aspects of a problem, and matching them up to the best format.

Assuming that the writer knows how to write and is not tired, dispeptic or inimical to his subject, Hazam feels that a poor script indicates inadequate research or an impossible subject.

Hazam says his problem is to do an interesting job of something that's been done a hundred times before. He evidently succeeds, because a New York newspaper recently pointed out "Home Is What You Make It" as an example of the way all public service shows should be handled.

Success in Bunches

ANOTHER wearer of the wreath is Sol Panitz, who almost never goes to the post without booting home a winner. For WINX, Panitz wrote three special dramatic shows and also produced and directed a series of 13 of which 4 were his own scripts. The series, "Bright Tomorrow," won an East-West Association award, a Variety award and a nod from Ohio State. One of the special shows, "The Immigrant," earned an Ohio State accolade in the one-time-only classification, and another of the special shows, "Memo to the People," was selected by "World Security Workshop" for rebroadcast on the ABC network.

Panitz feels that the series probably won an award because it dealt with a timely topic—better race relations. "A series on lack of medical care in 1840 wouldn't have won any prizes," he says.

In addition, all scripts used were written in moments of inspiration. Pantiz wrote only as many as he felt inspired to write. The rest he got from other top-notch script writers—mostly professional—who had written them as labors of love and gladly sold them to WINX for a token fee since their subject matter was unacceptable to more lucrative markets.

Panitz feels that the smaller centers (other than New York, Chicago and Hollywood) do the most experimental and provocative work. Limited equipment seems to bring out the initiative in directors. One of Panitz's favorite sound effects was devised for "The Immigrant" from the strings of a piano, since nothing else was available.

PANITZ

HAZAM

Washington has few casting limitations, according to Panitz, who feels that the actors in "The Immigrant" were largely responsible for its success. They "really got into their parts," he says, although it was July 4 and the air conditioning had broken down.

Prefers One Shots

PANITZ is as sold on variety of format as Hazam. Assigned to write a Fourth of July script, Panitz read around until he found a subject that would lend itself to unusual treatment. "It was probably the difference of approach which won the award for 'The Immigrant,'" he says.

That, and the cast, and the fact that he could put all his effort into it because he wasn't "burdened with a series."

Altogether "The Immigrant" is a favorite with Panitz. He says he'd "like to run it every July 4 as long as my ego holds up" and is delighted that it will be included in a collection of a dozen of his scripts which will be published soon.

The third honored gentleman is John Edwards who runs the "Youth Asks the Government" show for WMAL-ABC. This Saturday afternoon feature recently won an Ohio State award although it is less than six month old. Edwards modestly admits that the idea for the show was not his. It originated with the ABC public affairs office in New York.

The show, which involves collaring a Government official who will submit to questioning by a panel of high school youngsters, was originally tossed to Edwards as an extra task. Now it takes most of his time, although he still acts as a Washington correspondent for ABC.

Credits the Kids

EDWARDS thinks the tremendous emotional appeal of teenagers asking perfectly adult questions of top men in Government is what makes the show go so well. Although Edwards gives the youngsters a quick lecture and some literature on the Government agency which is to be discussed, he doesn't tell them what questions to ask.

He tries to get timely guests and often is able to get officials who refuse other radio invitations but who are intrigued by the idea of the kids. Naturally he tries to get good "showmen" and he chooses youngsters who aren't mike shy. Many of them are repeaters on that program and have appeared on WTOP's "Youth Takes a Stand" and some WWDC shows.

He finds that the youngsters are uninhibited in their questions and "tear right into the big shots." And "being a generation raised on radio," they aren't afraid of the medium. Once, when a guest was several minutes late to the broadcast, the panel was all for barring the door and conducting a forum among themselves.

WOL Newscaster Gives Us a Fill-in

'Moscow Mary' Has a Yankee Accent

LATEST proponent of the theory that international shortwave broadcasts should be available to longwave listeners is WOL-Mutual. Newsman Al Warner discovered "Moscow Mary" broadcasting from Russia in English—with an American accent. Samples of the wares she is selling were recorded and included on Warner's weekly news review. If anything else worth while pops up, Warner will repeat the trick, and he may also use recordings of what the State Department has been beaming to Europe.

The Post could only suggest it (May 25) but a radio station went and did it.

The extracts Warner picked up were attacks on the American press with blasts at the New York Times, Baltimore Sun, Hearst newspapers, Drew Pearson, Joseph and Stewart Alsop and Hanson Baldwin.

The most expensive talent package ever assembled for Lux Radio Theater will be on the air tomorrow night when Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman and Alexis Smith appear in "One More Tomorrow" over WTOP-CBS. The Bing Crosby show for this Wednesday (WMAL-ABC) can't be any economy dish either—Ethel Merman and Alec Templeton will join Bing.

Dorothy Lamour will lure the men of America into the Army this summer. A 13-week recruiting series will be put into the Fred Allen spot beginning July 6 over WRC-NBC, with Dottie as emcee, singer, actress and greeter of guest stars.

WWDC's recently completed arrangements to carry all sports events scheduled for Uline Arena during the 1947-48 season, make it the sports station hands down. WWDC now carries all Nats games on its FM facilities, and all night and Sunday games on its standard band as well.

* * * *

Carmen Dragon, conductor-arranger who won an Academy Award for his musical scoring of motion pictures, gets star billing for the first time on the Maxwell House show which he and Frances Langford have taken over for the summer. The Thursday night WRC-NBC program also includes the services of Tobe Reed, who once announced 168 consecutive Sundays for the "Bandwagon" show.

Canadian Broadcasting Corp. for some time has had a firm rule against carrying mystery shows originating in the United States. This ban will be lifted for CBS' "The Whistler," which will be carried over CBC stations for 52 weeks beginning June 25.

Charlie Graves, who writes the words for Arno Tanney's chant on CBS' "Sound Off," often has bemoaned the fact that he never gets any fan mail. Last week he beamed when a letter arrived for him, "c/o 'Sound Off,' Hollywood, Calif." Proudly opening it before the assembled cast, he unfolded a laundry bill from New York.

About Bob Hope: No Tickets Left

Hope will be in Washington Tuesday night, but there's no hope for tickets. The Bob Hope broadcast over WRC-NBC will originate at the Statler, but neither the hotel nor WRC can help you out with tickets.

All tickets have already been distributed through Hope's sponsor, so if you are not already holding one in your hot little hand, you might as well forget it.

WTTG Lands The Rassles - And Gee-gees

PLAYING his cards close to the vest, John Gaunt, program manager for the local NBC television station which will begin operations June 27, gave the Electrical Institute of Washington a general picture of the programs which will be available for the first six months.

Speaking at a dinner Tuesday night, Gaunt indicated that most programs would come from New York, that plans were being made for remote pickups, etc., but gave few program details.

Leslie Arries, manager of WTTG, DuMont's local station which has been in operation over a year, had secrets too good to keep; he announced that wrestling matches at Turner's Arena and horse races at Laurel would be broadcast, and that Clark Griffith is expected to consent to telecasting the baseball games beginning June 13.

News of daytime programming inspired vocal approval from radio dealers who have been somewhat "stuck" trying to demonstrate sets during the day when no programs were being offered.

Louisville College Wired for Sleeping

A PAIR of Army engineers who are studying evenings at the University of Louisville sometimes drift off to Nod during their classes after a hard day. The professor, an obliging man and a physicist as well, took kindly to the idea of putting a microphone in his lapel and feeding the whole lecture into a wire recorder. The two students transfer the lectures to regular discs when they get back to camp and have a complete set of "notes" for study just before exam time.

National Gallery Show Features Chiaroscuro's Work

Woodcut Display To Be 'Fixture'

By Jane Watson Crane

THE National Gallery's new show, "Chiaroscuro Woodcuts from the Sixteenth to the Eighteenth Centuries" is a sizable and pleasant display, nowhere near as formidable as its title. Scheduled to run all summer, it is a loan collection the first of its kind to be shown in Washington and one of the few in existence anywhere.

Chiaroscuro, from the Italian, is a fancy word relating to the technique of handling light and shade. In painting, Leonardo and Corregio were masters of the art, but the greatest exponent of all time was Rembrandt. In print-making, chiaroscuro was developed early in the sixteenth century. It was the first reproduction process in color. (Earlier prints were colored by hand.)

In this type of print, at least one intermediary tone, between black and white, has been used to create the illusion, of varying light and shade. Sixteenth century artists found it a useful and effective means of imitating dark pen drawings, which were often done on colored paper.

German Invention

THE Germans are generally credited with invention of the process, but the Italians ran them a close second. In German works there is always a black outline, but the Italians frequently made prints entirely in tone blocks. The Italians stuck pretty closely to imitation of paintings or drawings, but while the Germans went in more for original designs, the Italians seemed to have the edge on freedom of execution.

Two of the earliest known German prints are shown here—"Lovers Surprised by Death" by Hans Burgkmair, and the "Virgin of Ratisbon" by Albrecht Altdorfer, a work in five color tones. The imposing "Virgin" represents a famous statue, believed to have miraculous powers, which was placed on an altar in a church erected in Ratisbon in 1519.

Among other German works is the well-known "Witches' Sabbath" by Hans Baldung, and a colored version of Durer's portrait of Ulrich Varnbuler. Color was added to the wood block and printed after Durer's death. Another Durer, which has an entertaining history, is a realistic print in green of a rhinoceros, an object of enormous curiosity in Europe at the time. Copied from the Portuguese drawing, it was a standard for rhinoceros pictures for years. Betty Mongan, the gallery's curator of prints, relates how an attempt was made to present the Pope with one of these strange-looking animals, but the ship was wrecked and the rhinoceros drowned on its way to Rome in 1519.

Striking inclusions in this section are geometric patterns of street scenes in black and white and russet by Erasmus Loy, sixteenth-century works not unlike the earlier designs of the contemporary artist De Chirico.

ilians Represented

THE Italian representation is large, and the works are full of grace. There is a dreamlike "Jacob's Ladder" and a lovely Madonna and Child in raspberry on white by Zanetti, seventeenth century, and our favorite of the lot. There are a great many prints by Ugo da Carpi, whose works are taken from Parmegianino, or sometimes from Raphael and other Italian painters. Da Carpi, who had several followers, also had an eye to business. He claimed protection from the Doge and the Venetian Senate for his process.

The show also includes Dutch seventeenth century landscapes, and works by a Frenchman, Nicolas Le Sueur, whose "Phaeton Driving the Chariot of the Sun" has a lot of style.

There was a revival of the chiaroscuro print in the eighteenth century, but judging from some contemporary examples which Miss Mongan had on hand but not on display, the process had degenerated into something mechanical rather than inventive. This is undoubtedly as good a show of its kind as you will ever see.

Like a Tonic

AT THE Phillips Gallery, the little summer show of small paintings, prints, and drawings from the permanent collection is like a tonic. Perhaps you have seen some of the works by Bonnard, Vuillard, Constantin Guys, Daumier, Goya, and the rest before. But they are worth a second visit. Toulouse-Lautrec's Aristide Bruant and some of his cafe singers are here. Daumier takes a poke at the law again in his "Plea for the Defense." There is a Van Gogh pen portrait, and a study by Fantin Latour, "Two Women Sewing."

The Washington Philatelist

'Investors' Stuck With Sheets

By William M. Stewart

ENTIRE sheets of stamps are not redeemed by the Post Office Department, at the Philatelic Agency or at any postoffice.

Recently there have been rumors that collectors have been redeeming sheets of commemorative stamps at face value. Such is not the case.

When postage rates have been changed, as in the case of the 8-cent air mail stamp, those holding supplies of the old stamps were allowed to exchange them for the new, but only for a limited time.

Unfortunately for some collectors who bought large quantities of sheets of commemoratives (the order called for upward of 75 million or 100 million), the large profits expected failed to materialize. These heavy purchasers might be correctly termed investors rather than stamp collectors.

In direct contrast is the small holding of mint sheets found in the average United States collection, and the fact that the owners never give a thought to investment.

Swedish Commemoratives

SWEDEN issued three commemorative stamps on April 23, honoring the 100th anniversary of the death of Erik Gustaf Geijer, Swedish historian, poet and philosopher. Two of the stamps are 5-ore denomination, both green, but with different perforations for coils and booklets. The third is a 90-ore, blue, perforated for coils. Geijer was professor of history at the University of Upsala in 1817. He was also a composer and some of his poems with musical settings are popular in Sweden today.

Austria will issue a series of air mail stamps, the first air mails to be issued by the postwar Austrian Republic. The designs will feature different types of planes in flight over various sections of Austria. The first three denominations were designed by Heinrich Blechner. Scenes in Austria are depicted on stamps thus far announced as follows: 3-schillings, purple brown, Schieder Lake near Hinterstoder in Upper Austria; 4-schillings, deep green, village in Praegraten in Eastern Tyrol, and 5-schillings, blue, view of the "Torsaule," an 8500-foot peak in Salzburg Province. At the bottom of each stamp is a description of the scene portrayed and names of the designer and engraver.

Delayed Anniversary

ABYSSINIA has issued a set of seven stamps commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of its first stamps. The anniversary was in 1944, but because of the war and printing difficulties the observance was postponed.

Among the seven are the first special delivery stamps ever issued, one a 30-centime, brown, showing a mail carrier on a motorcycle, and a 50-centime, blue, picturing a modern postoffice. In the upper right-hand corner of both stamps is a portrait of Emporer Haile Selassie. The other stamps: 10-centimes, orange, the Lion of Judah design which appeared on Abyssinia's 1894 issue; 20-centimes, blue, portrait of King Menelik II as it appeared on the 1894 issue; 30-centimes, brown, a pack train and a motor bus showing the development of mail transportation; 50-centimes, green, an early type postoffice, and 70-centimes, red violet, portraits of Menelik II and Haile Selassie I.

At the Monday meeting of the Woodridge Stamp Club it was announced that during the summer meetings will be held on July 7 and August 4, both at the Woodridge Library, 2206 Rhode Island ave. ne.

Air mail service will be inaugurated June 20 at Bozeman, Mont., on Route A M-3. A special cachet and the usual treatment of philatelic mail will be provided. At the request of collectors, covers originating at Bozeman will be sent to terminal or junction points to be served by the first flight, where they will be backstamped and forwarded to destination.

Meeting Change

THE Capital Precancel Club will meet at 8 p. m. tomorrow at the home of Rolston Lyon, 217 Rittenhouse st. nw. Because the Weeks Stamp Shop will be closed evenings for the summer, all club meetings will be held at Mr. Lyon's home. At the New York Centenary Exhibition the club was represented by Rolston Lyon, Dr. Chester Uhler, J. H. Weimer and George Hawse.

Delegate E. L. Bartlett, of Alaska, has introduced a House resolution for a special postage stamp in commemoration of the eighteenth anniversary of the purchase of Alaska from Russia, which occurs October 18.

"The American Philatelic Dictionary and Colonial and Revolutionary Posts" has just been published by Jacques Minkus, New York. The author is Harry M. Konwiser, an authority of first rank. Its thousands of definitions of words and phrases deserve a place in any collector's archives.

Mr. Konwiser also has written an authoritative history of the American postal systems during the Colonial and Revolutionary periods that will be of much interest to the collector of early American items, especially of cancellations. Prescott Holden Thorp, the authority on envelopes, wrote the foreword.

At the regular Tuesday meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Ellery Denison and Henry Gabriel conducted an auction and another call was issued for good lots to maintain the high standard. Meetings are at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

Yale Keeps Trumbull Art With His Body

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 7 (AP).—Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge.

John Trumbull, the great American artist, applied this vow of Ruth to himself and his paintings, and Yale University still is keeping the vow 98 years after Trumbull died. Yale will continue to keep it as long as it keeps Trumbull's paintings, the most valuable art collection the university owns and one of the most valuable in America.

Trumbull gave his paintings to Yale 11 years before he died in return for an annuity of $1000 and with the stipulation that they never be separated from the body of his wife, who died in 1832, or from his body after his death.

The bodies now lie in a vault beneath the main entrance to the Yale art gallery, their third resting place.

The story was recalled recently at Yale's special convocation marking the university's return to a peacetime basis.

Theodore Sizer, director of the art gallery, says that on an average of "once a week" somebody asks to borrow the Trumbull collection. But if the paintings, which include the famous Signing of the Declaration of Independence, move, so must the bodies. Hence the requests never are granted.

Asked what Yale's attitude would be were some borrower willing to move the bodies along with the collection, Sizer said such an idea was "too preposterous" to contemplate.

Yale has moved them twice, however. They were interred originally beneath the old Trumbull gallery on the campus, moved to Street Hall in 1868 and again to the present gallery in 1928.

Tradition has it that the bodies were loaded on a wheelbarrow for the transfers, but Sizer doubts that the 1868 gallery directors were so informal and knows that it didn't happen in 1928 when he himself superintended the removal. Then the coffins were draped in American flags, carried to the new gallery in pallbearer fashion, the collection of paintings accompanying them, and the original burial service conducted at Trumbull's funeral was repeated.

Former Fat Boy Is Script Writer

"Well, well! Peter Barry is certainly getting to be a little boy now."

At the age of 12, the author of WOL-Mutual's new "Scotland Yard" series Tuesdays at 8) weighed 375 pounds and rolled away to join the circus.

Later he turned his unusual attributes to good use in the wrestling ring. When he unexpectedly and for no discernible reason began to slim down to a meager 135 pounds, Barry had to make a living with his wits.

First an actor, then a playwright and now a successful radio writer, Barry expects the new mystery series starring Basil Rathbone to be his most interesting—if not his weightiest—assignment.

Artists Equity Roster Tripled in 3 Months

THERE IS much interest in the newly formed Artists Equity Association, counterpart of the organizations for musicians, actors and authors.

With regional directors in all parts of the country, Artists Equity has jumped from a membership of 150 in March to 500 today.

Directors from the District of Columbia are Heinz Warneke, sculptor, and Richard Lahey, painter, both members of the Corcoran teaching staff.

Honorary president of the newly formed organization is Leon Kroll. Officers are Yasuo Kuniyoshi, president; Frank Kleinholz, secretary, and Joseph Hirsch, treasurer. Appointed executive director is Hudson Walker, president of the American Federation of Arts.

Artists Equity grew out of a small meeting held in the New York office of the American Federation of Arts last November to explore the possibilities of forming an artists' organization "based entirely on the economic needs of the artist."

Besides the broad objective of promoting American art and the interest of American artists, the association is aiming to set up standards of procedure to protect the artist and reputable dealers from unscrupulous practices, to iron out problems relating to copyright, reproduction and royalties, and to establish a clearing house for professional information. A welfare fund is also contemplated.

It is planned to work closely with museums, educational institutions, industrial organizations and other art organizations in working out a program.

Membership dues, set at $12 a year, will be devoted to payment of operating expenses and the salary of an executive secretary. Offices are at 39 East 35th st., New York 16, N. Y.

AMONG exhibitions by local artists, there is a new group show at Community Education's Gallery, aptly called "In Transit," for much of the work is experimental. Dante Radice, who organized the exhibit, uses thick paint and strong colors in two designs reminiscent of the work of Picasso.

Frances Feery has an unusual inclusion for her, an elusive figure composition in pale colors.

Some of Douglas Brown's tropical water colors are shown, as is his oil of a woman and child in red, exhibited here before in his show at the Porter Gallery. Jack Berkman has two oils which leave a somewhat unhappy impression, for they are restless, inconclusive renderings. They are not up to his work at Barnet-Oden Gallery. Jacob Kainen, Laura Douglas, and Jozef Pielage are better represented.

There is a little carved sculpture by Maxim Elias that seems just right for subject and medium, an entry so well resolved that it makes some of the others seem tentative by comparison. There are interesting individual works in the group, but they make an oddly assorted unit.

FEATURED this week at the National Gallery is Monet's impression of "Rouen Cathedral," which hangs in the Chester Dale collection. It will be the subject of short gallery talks twice daily.

Although Rouen, target of repeated attacks for over four years, suffered more than any other city in France, the cathedral was fortunately only partly destroyed. The sculpture was undamaged and the building (damage was mainly on the south aisle) can be restored.

The gallery has a great number of regular weekend commuters, who attend whenever the schedule changes. The summer program, however, is designed for transients. Continuous tours will make a survery of the entire gallery, pausing at certain key paintings and sculptures in the various sections. These tours will last about 50 minutes. On Sundays this summer an illustrated lecture on "Your National Gallery: What It Is and What It Has" will be given by staff members.

Besides the Monet, other paintings to be the subject of special talks in June are Bellini's "Feast of the Gods," Gainsborough's "Duchess of Devonshire" and "The Maas at Dordrecht" by the Dutch landscape painter, Albert Cuyp.

OPENING JUNE 15 at the Pan American Union is an exhibition of recent paintings by the Nicaraguan artist, Rodrigo Penalba, who has spent the last 10 years in Italy. Penalba, who is now in this country, studied at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts and later in Spain and Mexico. He went to Italy on a fellowship of the Nicaraguan government in 1938, graduating in 1941 from the Academy of Fine Arts in Rome. During the war he lived in a small village in central Italy.

Sculptor Given One-Man Show By N. Y. Museum

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP).—One of the great contemporary sculptors, and one of the few whose works are largely of religious subjects, the Yugoslav Ivan Mestrovic has been having his first show here in over 20 years.

It is the first exhibition sponsored by the academy and the institute and yet held, not at the academy, but at the Metropolitan Museum; and it's the first time the Metropolitan has ever given a living sculptor a one-man show.

It almost wasn't held at all. All the pieces, from a Virgin only several inches high to a sixton Pieta, were done within about 10 months last year, and all were done on borrowed time, for during the war Mestrovic was captured by Anton Pavelic's followers, sentenced to die and, just a few hours before execution, reprieved through the intercession of the Pope.

Short and square-shouldered, dressed in a black suit, heavily bearded, his face wrinkled, amiable and gentle, the Yugoslav patriarch gets along easily in French and indifferently in English.

Teaching at Syracuse University since January and due to stay there at least a year, he hopes he can go out to the Rockies sometime before he leaves this country.

All the Best in France, by Sydney Clark. (Dodd, Mead; $3.50.)

You may go back again comfortably and cheaply, says Clark. He tells about postwar money, passports, travel, hotels, restaurants. The book consists mostly however, of information as available in 1939 as in 1947; perhaps the title is a little pretentious.

Books on East Pan the West

The Future of Freedom in the Orient, by Ralph Coniston (Norton; $3).

FREEDOM, to the Easterner, is "when the English, or French, or Dutch, go." But there will be no peoples left behind sufficiently educated, as a whole, to govern themselves; there is incredible want but not a penny for the purchase of the products of the machine age; hatreds among Sikhs, Moslems and Hindus, between Nagas and Burmese, and so on in country after country, are implacable; new nationalisms rise ominously; the Red-Democratic rivalry is deadly.

If the white man drops his burden, who, asks Coniston, is equipped to pick it up? But if he does not, he's apt to get his throat cut. America means well, he grants, but it has helped some colonial powers against natives, and the affection traditionally felt for us by the Chinese, among others, cools as they see us back not democracy but reaction against communism.

This book seems to be journalism at about its best.

I've Shed My Tears: A candid view of resurgent India, by D. F. Karaka (Appleton Century; $3).

This author, son of a prominent Bombay family, reports a fresh spirit of revolt in India and, like Coniston, finds his country on the move. But as his title indicates, he is no cool and collected observer, he is a passionate advocate . . . "I know I shall have my freedom soon and I shall have my self-respect."

He introduces us to his relatives, to national leaders like Gandhi and Nehru, and to samples of the unshod, underfed, ragged 400 million Indians. As an Oxford student, he won honors rarely accorded to people of his race, and during his successful newspaper career he ran across a lot of things from which we must conclude that a lot of white folks are, to be plain, stinkers.

LAURENCE CRITCHELL
tells the most exciting war story yet, in his big, thrilling history of the heroic 501st Parachute Infantry. Vivid and straightforward, this is a picture of paratroopers in action; a story of valiance that carries you from a dusty Georgia training camp through Normandy * Holland  Bastogne  and Berchtesgaden * A book filled with flavor and action, with laughs and hardships, and most of all with the gusty personalities—from buck private to general—of the paratroopers.

Art and Otherwise

Drawings by American Artists, selected and edited by Norman Kent. (Watson-Guptill; $5.)

Here's a handsome book containing more than 75 drawings, each with brief but illuminating commentary. Among the artists represented are Benton, Cook, Bosa, Cadmus, Carroll, Marsh, Martin, Shinn, Sloan, Sterne, Taubes but there are side dishes of tripe, too.

Keeps Secondary Rights in Memoirs

Winnie Declines Cool Half Million

THE one million dollars paid by Life and The New York Times for Churchill's memoirs is half a million less than he was offered from another source. The previous offer, however, would have included all subsidiary rights.

Konrad Bercovici tells me that were he younger he would not have accepted the $95,000 in settlement of claims against Charles Chaplin (who used his seven-page handwritten outline as a basis for "The Great Dictator"). Two reasons impelled Bercovici to accept: (1.) He is headed for the hospital for a major operation; (2) Income taxes would have eaten up most of his added profits.

Bercovici says he was originally promised a percentage deal.

Character Real

AS most of literate America knows, the vixen in Ludwig Lewisohn's masterpiece "The Case of Mr. Crump" was a very real woman intricately entangled with his personal life. "It isn't the material you use," Lewisohn said to me the other day. "It's the use you make of the material. After all there were hundreds of Mildreds in London at the time, but only Somerset Maugham could write 'Of Human Bondage.'"

Lewisohn added an intriguing fact of which I was unaware. Five real people who were used as prototypes in Thomas Mann's "Buddenbrooks" sued for libel. A liberal German judge who understood the literary implications found for Mann and dismissed the suits.

You can still distribute as many books as you like if profit is not the immediate concern and paper is available. The Armed Services Editions, published at cost, have finally achieved a total distribution of 122 million copies.

And speaking of reprints, desperate English publishers will let Penguin Books acquire publishing sovereignty over every edition after the first of all new books published. The inexpensive Penguins have an enormous paper quota and can do the job. Erskine Caldwell's salty satire "God's Little Acre" has just reached 2,500,000 copies in the 25 cent edition.

WINSTON CHURCHILL
. . . knows his rights

Yokel-Worship

IN recent years Sinclair Lewis, Bernard De Voto and other American authors have taken lusty swings at New York City. A. J. Liebling in the June issue of Esquire magazine strikes back with a horse shoe in each glove. He calls America's "fine pioneer stock" a lot of backwoodsmen who were chased out of the civilized settlements.

Liebling finds De Voto's devotion to the Yankee myth a pure case of yokel-worship. Just why, he asks, are about seven million people living in New York? I'll bite, Liebling, why?

Germany, which before the rise of Hitler was one of the most literate nations in the world, has curious taste in books. C. S. Forester's "The General," one of the most devastating satires on the military mind ever written, was taken at face value as a romanticization of the big brass by the thick-witted Krauts. As a result the author was invited to Germany, where he spent most of his royalties helping victims of Hitler. (Little Brown has just reissued "The General.")

An even more curious reaction is the current enthusiasm in Germany for Ben Lucien Burman's "Blow for a Landing." It is a good, sentimental, colorful book of river life, but hardly the awe-inspiring epic of heroic scope the German critics are now contending. The Berlin Tagespiegel burbles "Willow Joe is a Mississippi Parsifal."

Yves Tanguy made a drawing for Anna Balakian's "Literary Origins of Surrealism," Publicity-wise Columbia University Press held a contest to name the curious drawing. Some of the titles submitted show the razor's edge between art and insanity: "Dada Loves Mama," "Open the Salvador, Dali" and "Id in Pursuit of Ego."

Qaraqalpaq

IF YOU have run through most of the easier languages we suggest that you master "Qaraqalpaq" by purchasing Karl H. Menges books on the subject published by the King's Crown Press. Curiously enough "no scholarly grammar of this Altaic language from Central Asia has ever been compiled." In case you are interested "Qaraqalpaqistan, an autominous area northeast of the Khiva oasis, stretches from the shores of the Aral Sea along the right bank of Amu-Darya," which should place it for you exactly.

Cost of calf feed is going up by the hour. Homer Croy, author of "Corn Country" (Duell, Sloan and Pearce), lost his traveler's checks in his calf pasture. Rushing back he found a contented calf eating $360 with relish. After a tug of war Croy pried loose the chewed checks. Oh, yes, the American Express Co. refunded the money.

Invariably vice-crusaders have the largest libraries of pornography to be found in any given city—strictly in the line of duty of course. But John S. Sumner achieved a new and unwarranted bit of publicity the other day when his name was confused with that of an author he was prosecuting. Having unsuccessfully brought court proceedings against "End As A Man" by Calder Willingham, his name somehow attached itself to the book in the mind of a London editor who wired his New York correspondent for a "review copy of 'End As A Man' by John S. Sumner." It shouldn't happen to a vice-crusader.

2 Books Show Why Russia Confuses Us

A Room On The Route, by Godfrey Blunden (Lippincott, $3); Sons, by V. A. Smirnov, translated by Naomi V. Yohel Doubleday, $2.75).

Australian-born Blunden takes for the subject of his novel a small group of men and women in Moscow during World War II, and Smirnov, of the Soviet Writers' Union, gives a fictional account of the between-wars collectivization of a small village. Even allowing for the difference in the periods, you would think these men were writing about countries as far apart as two moons, as opposite as Utopia and Gehenna.

Sometimes Moving

Smirnov's story is about Anna Mikhallovna and her twin sons. Grubbing for a meager existence, at best keeping a horse and cow, laboring to clothe the growing youngsters, fighting with her neighbor, getting more and more help from the experimental village Soviet, Anna is won over slowly to acceptance of the new society.

The sons indulge in the usual rivalry of brothers, the fond mother feels the aspirations and the heartaches customarily expected of any democratic or capitalistic parent, the family acquires a brand new house, and Anna receives her reward, not in heaven, but in the Kremlin. The story is sometimes unreal and always sentimental, but it does contain some moving passages. It suffers from an unidiomatic translation.

Would Scare Bravest

Blunden's picture would throw a scare into the bravest. A James Ferguson tells much of the melodramatic story of his acquaintance with Mitka, Rachel, Mary Anderson, Gregor, Ivan, Kopchick, Karl and other Russians in and near an apartment overlooking the broad avenue along which fear-stricken Soviet officials dash in their bullet-proof cars. Ferguson's friends tremble at the sound of a footstep, see death in every shadow, spy on one another, endure hideous tortures and can't decide whom they hate the more: Fascists or Communists.

In spite of some pages of exciting reading, the explanations of why Stalinists are devils take up too much space. In the course of a discussion, one of Blunden's characters suggests they change the subject; "There's a party on," he remembers. The trouble with the novel is not enough party, too much party line. Fans Add Tip On Collecting Invitation to Book Collecting, by Colton Storm and Howard Peckham (Bowker; $5).

A lot of people have the idea that a book collector is a crusty old millionaire who pays fabulous prices for books he never reads. The facts are quite the opposite. There are thousands of book collectors in this world. Usually they pay very little for their acquisitions and, best of all, they get a whale of a lot of fun out of it.

Every few years or so there appears a book singing the joys of book collecting in simple language and aimed at the average man. Edmund Pearson, Vincent Starrett, John Winterich, A. Edward Newton are among those who come to mind.

Now Storm and Peckham have continued the tradition. Their book, they say, while revamped from a series of lectures at the University of Michigan, chiefly was "to preach the fun we find in collecting books, manuscripts, maps and prints."

"We hope," they declare in their introduction, "we have effectively punctured the notion that only wealthy persons can afford to collect books, and that collectible books are always expensive."

Storm is curator of maps and manuscripts of the Clements Library, Ann Arbor, Mich. Peckham is director of the Indiana Historical Bureau. By A. P.

WILLIAM HARDY McNEILL, an assistant United States military attache in Greece from 1944 to 1946, has written a useful source book in view of the present controversy, in "The Greek Dilemma" (Lippincott; $3.50).

New Tinglers By Du Bois And Powell

AND HOPE TO DIE. By Richard Powell. Simon & Schuster, Inc. 250 pp. $2.50.

ANDY BLAKE and his zany wife, Arab, are spending what unheroic Andy hopes will be a peaceful vacation in Florida. But Arab gets interested in fishing, and catches a teen-age girl with a better gift for story-telling than the most experienced fishermen. This is the beginning of a wild adventure in which everything happens to Andy, as usual, from serving as shark bait to being flagrantly exposed to the wiles of a beautiful woman.

The story falls pretty much into the usual, but exciting, Arab-Andy pattern. Plenty of action, and a lot of mystery involving the smuggling into the USA of an especially unsavory gang of collaborators.

THE FOOTSTEPS. By Theodora Du Bois. Doubleday. 189 pp. $2.

BLACKMAIL, a family's proud reputation, and footsteps that aren't there combine to make this a tense story. It's about a judge and his very normal family—that is, except for one cousin Fritz who paints his fingernails an increasingly vivid shade until, at the end of the story, they are a deep red. And the judge's hitherto steady daughter begins to hear the footsteps. Her fiance calls in his friends, Jeffrey and Ann McNeill, who employ a combination of psychiatry and crime detection to get to the bottom of things.

There is, of course, little doubt who is the villain of the piece, but the tale is exciting for all that.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF ELLERY QUEEN. The World Publishing Co. 307 pp. $.49.

A COLLECTION of eight stories and a short novel giving some of Ellery Queen's latest adventures for those fans who missed one or all of them the first time around. The short novel, "The Lamp of God" is somewhat Poe-ish in character. The stories range from four on murders in the sports world to one about murder in a Coney Islandish fun house.

Author Sees Paine's Hand In Declaration

Thomas Paine, Author of the Declaration of Independence. By Joseph Lewis. Freethought Press. 315 pp. $3.

Joseph Lewis believes that Thomas Paine, not Thomas Jefferson, wrote the Declaration of Independence. He argues:

That the literary style seems to be Paine's rather than Jefferson's.

That Jefferson seldom used the word "hath" but preferred the form "has." There is one "hath" in the Declaration.

That the deleted portion of the Declaration striking out at slavery represented Paine's attitude toward slavery, not the attitude of slave-owning Jefferson.

Offers Testimony

That Paine was in constant touch (?) with the members of the committee chosen to draft the Declaration.

That both the Jefferson draft and the Adams copy of the Declaration were copied (?) from some previous draft of the document, presumably Paine's.

The author claims that Jefferson after Paine's death was forced by overenthusiasm and overzealous partisans to acknowledge against his will that the Declaration was his creation. And he gives the contradictory testimony of Jefferson and John Adams.

"John Adams said that he and Jefferson met as a subcommittee to draft the Declaration; that he urged Jefferson to draft it; and that, for reasons that seem silly even to a schoolboy, Jefferson was finally prevailed upon to do the job. Then, after it was done, he did not remember making a single suggestion or correction.

Seems Inconclusive

"Jefferson, on the other hand, denied every statement of Adams. He said there was no subcommittee. That he was appointed to draft the Declaration, and that it was done immediately, without his having 'to turn to either book or pamphlet while writing it,' and that Adams did make corrections on it."

This reviewer does not pretend to be well enough informed on the technicalities of the argument to judge the merits of Lewis' sensational theory. The evidence seems inconclusive. But the implications are sufficiently startling to warrant investigation by a board of competent historians. BY S. N.

'Lydia Bailey' Prompts New Translation

Moreau de St. Mery's American Journey, 1793-1798, translated and edited by Kenneth Roberts and Anna M. Roberts. Doubleday. $5.

While working on his novel, "Lydia Bailey," Kenneth Roberts consulted Moreau as an eighteenth century contemporary of his heroine. He was so taken with the book that he and Mrs. Roberts decided to translate the Frenchman's journal.

It's a grand service they have done, for Moreau paints our ancestors, the young men and women of the newly formed republic, realistically. Moreau supported the French Revolution until it became the terror, when he fled aboard an American brig just in time to escape the guillotine.

Even the guillotine, he must have reflected, couldn't have been much worse than the crossing from Le Havre to Hampton Roads, from November 9 to March 5, or 120 days during which he lost 22 pounds.

Virginia farmers, he says, purged themselves every autumn; coach drivers were usually drunk; white sheets were rare in taverns; passengers in coastwise ships who kept their boots on in berths were fined; Princeton was "where sport and licentious habits are said to absorb the pupils more than study." Americans, says this friend of Talleyrand, loved the English but felt inferior to them, were untrustworthy in business, had little initiative.

Moreau lives up to our popular notion about Frenchmen by showing great interest in the relations between men and women, even between women and women. Whatever else we didn't have at the end of the eighteenth century, we did have an awful lot of sex.

Aliens of '61 Deftly Fitted Into Fiction

The Scarlet Patch, by Bruce Lancaster (Atlantic-Little, Brown; $3).

WHATEVER the popular impression may be, the American Civil War was not fought entirely by native Americans. There were foreign-born men, thousands of them, in the ranks and in command, on both sides.

A few years ago Ella Lonn uncovered the extent of alien contributions to the South in her scholarly and original "Foreigners in the Confederacy." The Northern chapters of the story have been more familiar—names like Carl Schurz and Franz Sigel come readily to mind—but the depth of such men's help has been only sketchily explored.

Lancaster here throws a clear light into those depths. The value is not diminished by the fact that the book is fiction. This is historical fiction at its best.

Lancaster previously has established himself as a careful, capable craftsman in that delicate field. "Guns of Burgoyne," "Trumpet to Arms," "Bride of a Thousand Cedars" are well known. "The Scarlet Patch" is a worthy addition to that select company.

The story centers about the Rochambeau Rifles, a fictional regiment; the Frenchman, Jean de Merac, who led it into battle; and the grim West Pointer, Dudley Pelham, who hated foreigners and was the Rifles' brigadier. (Pelham is an unhappy choice for a name here; there will be inevitable confusion with Gallant John Pelham who was the commander of Jeb Stuart's horse artillery.)

Historical figures are woven easily and convincingly into the story; indeed the most glamorous figure in the book is Phil Kearney, and the diamond-shaped piece of felt which his division adopted as its insignia gives the book its name. Lancaster writes that Kearney was slated to command the Army of the Potomac when he was killed at Chantilly; that admittedly is a historical liberty and yet, as Lancaster says, there are enough contemporary hints and speculations to warrant its presentation as possible fact.

Coast Banker's Biography Too Well Scented

A. P. Giannini; Giant of the West. By Julian Dana. Prentice-Hall. 345 pp. $4.50.

THIS book is sacred to the dubious memory of that virile septuagenarian, A. P. Giannini who runs the largest banking empire in America.

Successful commission merchant at 15, father of the "tie-in" sale, ready to retire at 30, he is now at 76 head of a bank with three and one half million depositors and more assets than Chase National.

How did he manage such a super-Alger Boy climb? This author says by hard work, honesty, determination, quick thinking, courage, independence and vision, plus such heroics as personally saving two million dollars in gold from the San Francisco fire.

I should like to see this book critically reviewed by Eugene Meyer, Henry Morgenthau, jr., or Carey McWilliams (who knows the citrus fruit and agricultural monopolies of the West Coast). It would also be interesting to hear what the SEC, NLRB and Internal Revenue men have to say about this solid mass of verbal orchids.

If eulogies, encomiums, panegyrics and paeans of praise can embalm a myth in sanctity, Julian Dana has succeeded nobly. In any case here lies—in perpetual trust—the colossus of California.

Much of Mann Himself in His Essays

By Sterling North

ESSAYS OF THREE DECADES. By Thomas Mann. Knopf. 472 pp. $4.

1. THOMAS MANN has injected an important element of autobiography and self-criticism into his 16 nonpolitical essays dealing with literature, music and psychoanalysis."

Without false modesty he knows himself to be a great writer in an important tradition. Thus Mann in his relationship to Goethe, Mann in his relationship to Tolstoy, Wagner and Freud, Mann as a German and as a world citizen seems quite as important to the author as any purely objective criticism he might offer.

The total effect is enlightening, entertaining, and occasionally unintentionally revealing.

First it must be said that despite his emancipation from the more violent forms of German nationalism and his total rejection of the Nazi myths, Thomas Mann is still deeply influenced by the original sources of some of those dangerous beliefs.

For instance, in his essay on Goethe and Tolstoy he makes the curiously bland remark that "The instinct of self-preservation, full of reserve as it is, felt by the German people in their central position as a world-bourgeoisie, is genuine nationalism. For that is the name we give to a people's craving for freedom, to the pains they take with themselves, to their effort after self-knowledge and self-fulfilment."

Full of reserve, indeed! After five unprovoked wars of aggression inflicted upon the rest of the planet I would scarcely call this impulse "a craving for freedom."

Thomas Mann, unfortunately, is speaking the literal truth when he says in another of these essays: "Goethe, Schopenhauer, Wagner, Nietzsche—there it all is, the firmament of our youth with its fixed stars; Germany and Europe at once, our origins of which we are proud, for all origins, all sense of an intellectual origin, are aristocratic: 'The artist must have an origin, must know whence he comes,' Goethe says."

But it was Goethe who gave the world the amoral delights of selling one's soul to the devil for a combination of power, sensualism and knowledge. Schopenhauer in "The World As Will and Idea" offered humanity not only the most pessimistic but the most immoral philosophy ever devised. For if the Ding an sich is really the cosmic, savage "Will" or "Will to Survive," and if the intellect is only a weaker offshoot of that "Will" snidely acceding to its demands, then Adolph Hitler was absolutely right in everything he did and everything he stood for. As for Wagner with his powerful dramatizations and orchestrations of the violent old Nordic myths, no single musician did more for the later-day cult of blood and soil. Nietzsche, fourth horseman in Dr. Mann's cavalcade, broke with both his old teacher Schopenhauer and with Wagner. But even Thomas Mann admits the deep integration of the mountain-top poet, pessimist and humanity-hater with the two contemporary geniuses he sometimes so bitterly denounced.

It is not enough that both Goethe and Nietzsche deplored self-satisfied folk culture and folk myths and strove on one level for internationalism. With the other hand they bolstered some of the most dangerous aspects of rising German nationalism—becoming, in fact, patron saints of the pathological Germans of our day.

THOMAS MANN
". . . knows himself to be a great writer

Thomas Mann's delight in Schopenhauer does not blind him to the dangers of his philosophy, much of which, however, he unconsciously accepts. But his interest in Freud is on a far less dangerous level. Making the comparison between "Will and Idea" in Schopenaur and "Id and Ego" in Freud he offers a great literary and psychoanalytical service to mankind. For in Freud there was at least the great hope that Ego would finally shape and overcome Id—that the rational, sublimating, playful, aware Ego would at least modify the dangers and enlighten the midnight of the subconscious. Hitler, of course, was attempting to let Id overcome Ego—to loosen the dark passions rather than curb them.

In one other respect, however, Mann's admiration for Freud merely bolsters a predeliction he has always had. He, like Freud, believes in the continuum of any great myth. Thus all messiahs are in some respects the same person. Aphrodite and Astarte become Cleopatra in the flesh. Caesar relives the life of Alexander, and Napoleon in turn believes himself both Caesar and Charlemagne.

Thomas Mann, incidentally, seems in this series of essays to be unconsciously identifying himself with both Goethe and Tolstoy. Out of this tradition he acquires almost sonorous self-satisfaction.

May a critic who does not believe himself to be either Taine or Sainte-Bouve humbly suggest that such myth-making and myth-following is a dangerous and essentially Germanic self-deception.

OVER AT UNCLE JOE'S; MOSCOW AND ME. By Oriana Atkinson. Bobbs-Merrill. 325 pp. $3.

WELL, now it can be told. The plumbing doesn't work too well even at the Metropole. A decent meal costs 35 American dollars if you dine out (which is practically never). A pair of shoes costs a worker three months' salary if he can bring enough documents to prove he needs a pair of shoes.

Still want to switch to the Good Old Russian system, Tavarich?

They're friendly folks, the wife of the New York Times drama critic insists. They're so honest you can leave jewelry lying around and nobody touches it. They're hell-bent for Utopia with a gleam in their eye, a hole in their boots and a patch on every garment.

But they also have rackets in Moscow. The milk isn't fit to drink. The peasants are dirty and greedy. The workmanship is unbelievably sloppy (read the classic on fixing the bathroom door); the men let the women do the heavy work and carry the burdens; they smoke sitting on gasoline drums in the planes. They drink for only one reason—to pass out as soon as possible.

Funny fellows these Russians.

They are belligerently and patronizingly cock-sure that they have the best system in the world, but they greedily devour any American magazine while going out of their way to belittle our standard of living, which they insist is either a Fascist lie or a goal they will equal and surpass.

The Soviet-kept press is both so dull and so slanted that it is easily the worst in the world. The American correspondents greet each other joyfully with parodies of Pravda: "Hello, you Fascist beat; what revolting vomit of lies are you planning to spew out to the capitalist-controlled press today?"

On the other hand, the Russians do everything possible for the small fry. They give them a remarkably solid education, on which they spend a much larger proportion of the total budget than we do; print for them an intriguing daily paper, and dress them surprisingly well considering the appalling general poverty. This turns out a variety of children from those who are solid and sweet and friendly and stoical, to some who are shrewd, mean, grasping and potentially dangerous. Oriana Atkinson does a wonderful job in her chapter on the children.

Mrs. Atkinson likes the architecture of the theaters, but is critical of the plays and films. She scoffs at the pompous hypocrisy of Russian "democracy" in which there is literally no choice on the ballot. She despises the smug and vicious bureaucracy, while sympathizing with the ordinary Russian, led as he is with a ring through his nose.

She met some wonderful people in Russia. She found the usual romantic heart beating in many a Russian breast with a goodly percentage of the girls eager to buy cosmetics from the state trust.

She praises the palaces of culture and rest, which are far in advance of anything American industrialists furnish for their workers.

But the final conclusions are those any neat, efficient, intelligent American wife would be likely to have. Russia is no place to live. Russia is no place to raise a family. Russia is a cold-eyed giant whose potential danger to the planet is literally hair-raising.

There is no scholarly, abstruse, statistic-filled, unreadable tome. It is a warm, unprejudiced woman's-eye view of a rough, tough, hopeful unhouse-broken nation. For my money it is worth any half dozen "serious" studies we have had of life over at Uncle Joe's.

An Epilogue

Gertrude Stein's 'Now Puzzling God'

By Carl Van Vechten

SHE who was known and loved as Gertrude Stein, born at Allegheny, Pa., in 1874, now rests in Pere Lachaise at Paris, along with Balzac, Oscar Wilde, Daumier, Beaumarchais, Delacroix, Brillat-Savarin, and countless other writers, painters, musicians. "She has ascended to Paradise," a friend of hers and mine recently observed, "and doubtless is now engaged in puzzling God!"

In spite of advice to the contrary, it is much too early to appraise her work. To appraise her personality is much simpler. She was one of the great personages, not only of her own epoch but of the 70-odd years preceding her birth, and it is unlikely that any more startling figure will shake the literary world in the twentieth century.

Elliot Paul has already said that her talk was as brilliant as the famed Oscar Wilde. Certainly the desire to listen to her was almost a universal trait, and many were very celebrated people. Her beautiful voice in itself was hypnotic enough to give her words a special character; no other voice in Paris, save that of the divine Sarah Bernhardt, has ever evoked more enthusiastic comment.

Simply Objected

SHE was, it must be generally known by now, convinced that words had lost their meaning. I thought of this when I recently listened to some young people discussing the current language. "Radical" originally meant "basic" and it seemed highly probable to these boys and girls that "reactionary" in the first instance may have been employed to indicate a subject who reacted to outward stimuli. My somewhat out-of-date Thesaurus gives Communist as a synonym for mischief-maker, evil-doer, oppressor, tyrant, even brute, savage, monster and scourge of the human race!

It is little wonder, considering this, that somebody should decide that the time had come to rename objects. That Gertrude Stein's work, or even her design, was largely unintelligible to the outer world did not deter her. Quickly she discovered (or said she had) that it was (and is) impossible to arrange words in any order whatever in which they do not make sense—absolutely impossible.

This was an important discovery, inasmuch as her idea was to make sense, to be denotative constructively—not, as so many critics believe (and have written) to express the psychology of the unconscious, to beguile her own ears and others' with meaningless, even if beautiful sounds, not, especially NOT, to use words for their associations.

This is about as much (although she has said and written a great deal more) as she has ever actually let it be known about her work, for the very good reason that long ago she assured herself that her writing needs no explanation.

Reading Is Key

"READ WHAT I have written," she always said to those who demanded a key. Reading it is not such an unpleasant chore as some cynical persons would believe. It can be, if sympathetically approached, quite the reverse.

Her indirect influence on contemporary writing has been extensive, as has been pointed out. She has told us how she has weighed words and studied them until she was in complete possession of their essence and she has given some other writers the same incentive.

She never confused the language of conversation with the language she invented and experimented with, and a great body of her work is based on this universal language of conversation which is open to the casual reader to understand: "Three Lives," a classic in her own lifetime; "Wars I Have Seen," "Brewsie and Willie," much of "The Making of Americans," and the two autobiographies, "Alice's" and "Everybody's," all of which are most rewarding in one way or another.

Somebody said that when Gertrude Stein wrote about herself, she easily excelled the attempts of others to write about her. It is further true that she seldom wrote about anything else but herself.

One reason that her "difficult" work is hard to understand is that it is almost entirely subjective. It has been said that she was an actress who knew her part and played it for all it was worth. This is completely inaccurate. She has always wanted to be understood and appreciated and in the beginning suffered intensely when laughed at. She consoled herself by saying: "Nothing is meaningless if one likes to do it," as good a philosophy as any.

In the work of most writers distinct periods can be separated, but in the work of Gertrude Stein her conversation pieces mixed with her landscapes, her gossip with lectures. All of it was part of her, some of it, no doubt, less well done, but all a kind of testimony to her mind, her temperament, and yes, her genius. She may one day stand in marble and watch Paris and the world go by, but in a sense she stood on a pedestal all her life. "Three Lives" would give her a position as a great writer. There is sufficient evidence that she was a great woman as well.

WHITE COLLAR salaries, like the weather, is one of those subjects everybody talks about and nobody does anything about. Unlike the weather, however, talking might eventually help. A statement of the awful truth is made in the AMERICAN by Representative Mike Monroney of Oklahoma.

While wages for manually skilled workers have soared, wages for trained and experienced professional people have risen so little they have fallen far behind the rise in the cost of living the Congressman says. Taking United States Employment Service figures for the District, he shows that physicists are being offered as little as $46 a week and plasterers as much as $90. Bricklayers are being sought in newspaper's columns at $23 a day.

The Federal Government pays its janitors a better scale than does private industry, but is constantly losing its managers, trained at enormous expense, to private industry, where the $10,000 Government ceiling is far exceeded. In one recent month, Mr. Monroney says, the Government lost 250 key men to private industry. At another time the Treasury lost five top men at one swoop.

The main need, Monroney concludes, is for a change in attitude by captains of industry and taxpayers alike.

COSMOPOLITAN asks, "Is Psychoanalysis at War With God?" Gretta Palmer a recent convert says "Yes" and Howard Whitman takes the other side.

Miss Palmer holds that psychoanalysis replaces standards of good and evil with those of "health" or adjustment to society. Thus, she maintains, if the subject lived in Germany in 1935, perfect adjustment would have entailed becoming a Nazi. Free will is discounted, she says, because behavior is determined by what is past. Finally, she quotes Freud and several of his followers to prove that "a contempt for the conception of a God existing outside of the patient's mind is at the root of Freudian thought."

Whitman quotes a Catholic layman and psychoanalyst, Dr. Leo H. Bartemeier as saying, "It is a medical specialty, no more against God than surgery or any other branch of medicine." Whereas Miss Palmer maintains that the principle of reality means to obtain as much pleasure as possible at the smallest cost, Whitman says Freud emphasized the importance of curbing unbridled pleasure seeking. "Psychoanalysis," he explains, "points out that whereas conscious mastery and restraint lead to health and strength, unconscious repression all too frequently leads to neurotic illness."

On the other issues of faith, free will and the concept of God, Whitman argues, psychoanalysis not only does not undermine religion, but actually bolsters it.

A Sober Look At the Novel

The Novel and the World's Dilemma, by Edwin Berry Burgum (Oxford; $3.75).

These 19 essays, some reprinted from the more erudite magazines, about some 15 American and European novelists and the background of the perplexed and unstable modern world in which they have written, are a valuable addition to contemporary criticism.

Burgum examines the literary scene from the aloof vantage point of a professor's desk, and he is free to be as severe as his conscience, rather than his public, demands. He takes full advantage of that.

He begins with a consideration of the nature of our times. Poetry, which relied upon a general acceptance of certain fundamental faiths, has yielded in popular favor to the novel, which has the room for those digressions and amplifications which the individual writer must furnish with every book, since there is no universal base to our lives any more, no stock of precious convictions common to us all, not even many words which mean the same to everyone.

Judging novelists as responsible persons aware of the conflicts and confusions in the society for which they have set themselves up as spokesmen or interpreters, Burgum gives great credit to Proust, too often dismissed as a dilettante, and to Kafka, Joyce, Stein, Saroyan, Dreiser, Malraux, less to Hemingway and much less, for a change, to Mann.

TRAVEL SECTION

Trend Is Toward Longer Vacations

Bookings indicate a trend toward longer trips than were usual before the war, according to Thos. Cook & Son.

Many Easterners are planning vacation tours to California, the Pacific northwest, and Canadian Rockies. Reservations at all of the great national parks in the west are unusually heavy.

The trend toward longer trips is especially noticeable in reservations for Europe. Before the war most Americans who went abroad spent from four to five weeks traveling in the Old World. This summer six to seven-week tours are in the greatest demand.

Americans unable to go abroad since 1939 are now intent on seeing as much of the Old World as possible in one grand tour. Longer vacation periods together with new facilities for travel by air over long distances are changing the pattern of pleasure travel.

Check Yourself Along With Car

It's time for a "summer inventory of driving equipment," the Keystone Automobile Club advises motorists.

"By 'driving equipment,'" said Ernest R. Brett, manager of the Washington Club, "we mean not only the safety features of the car but the safety qualifications of the driver himself.

"This is going to be a busy summer on American highways and roads will be unsafe for mechanically unfit cars and physically deficient drivers.

"The wise motorist usually looks to his mechanical equipment, but often overlooks his own physical qualifications, such as sight and hearing. He is likely, also, to drive when the state of his general health is below par, thus materially reducing his efficiency as an operator.

"Our advice to motorists is to make both a mechanical and physical checkup."

Entrances Face East

Navajo Indian hogans in Arizona are always built with the entrance facing east. Thus, travelers lost in Navajoland can always learn their directions from one of the hogans.

Issue Stirs San Francisco

Voters to Settle Fate of Historic Cable Cars

SAN FRANCISCO, June 7.—It was just as though Mayor William O'Dwyer had said something about getting rid of Central Park, for all the noise that rolled up and down San Francisco's hills.

"Get rid of our cable cars!" said Mayor Roger D. Lapham and the fight was on.

He was not the first to say it, but he was in a position where his words actually might cause something to happen to San Francisco's fabulous tourist attraction. Buses should be substituted, he said; much more efficient.

Not all San Franciscans agreed. Thousands of them, every day, hang perilously by two fingers with a 1-foot balance on the steps of jam-packed cable cars (no ladies on the outside, please), as they roll and rock up and down hills during the late-afternoon rush of home-bound workers.

Not for a Limousine

But if they're true San Franciscans they'll tell every out-of-town guest they wouldn't trade their daily roller-coaster for limousine service. And as for buses—why, they'll have nothing to do with those fume-filled snorters.

Nevertheless, the city on the bay, from Nob Hill to the Embarcadero, was jolted when the mayor spoke.

Mayor Lapham obviously was sincere, since such a move is part of a 20-million-dollar street transit modernization program he is pushing.

But the Mayor, when elected, said he would serve one term only, and that term expires this November. He has no reelection worries. Six of the city's 11 supervisors do, and they know what sentimentalists San Francisco's residents can be.

They can read, too, and they can't fail to notice the tourist ads which tell the rest of the Nation: "You'll come to San Francisco one day and . . . ride the toylike cable cars" . . . and showing pictures of the famous little crates pointing their noses toward the sky.

Too Hot to Handle

And when the Chamber of Commerce recently reminded them that 837,718 tourists came to this area in 1946, and spent nearly 41 million dollars, they decided Mayor Lapham's idea was a little too hot to handle in the supervisorial chambers. The final nudge for the law-making body was a huge audience, mostly women, which packed the meeting hall one day recently.

They were representatives of a citizens' committee rallied around a "Save the Cable Cars" slogan. Headed by a physician's wife, Mrs. Hans Klussman, willing volunteers got thousands of signatures on initiative petitions, and the supervisors saw the light.

Instead of taking positive action, the supervisors tossed it to the people. In November the voters will decide whether the city, by charter amendment, should maintain the city-owned cable-car system.

It is probable that, before election time, the proposed charter amendment will be rewritten to provide that the city maintain only one line, basically as an attraction for tourists (a good many of whom will turn out to be home-towners who know how to have a lot of fun for a dime, or three rides for a quarter).

Rebuilt in 1923

Right now, the city has 27 cars, which are 54 years old, but were rebuilt in 1923. They haven't changed much since Andrew S. Hallidie, in 1873, invented the cable method of climbing the city's hills. A heavy metal grip extends down from the car through a slot in the street, grabs an endless cable moving at 9½ miles an hour, and climbs steep grades.

Although cable cars are regarded here as the most efficient means of transportation, so far as speed of loading and unloading passengers is concerned, the city's Public Utilities Commission points out several other factors which, it says, make the buses much more desirable. Says the commission:

The cable cars show the highest rate of accidents a 1000 miles of operation of any type of city-owned transportation and are the most expensive to operate. The rails need repair, or replacement, and they are not being made any more. The cable cars are traffic obstructions, because they stop at intersections on the grade, blocking cross-traffic. The turntable at Powell and Markets sts. (a major downtown intersection) blocks traffic.

They're Indestructible

On the other hand, cable car advocates point out that the cable never has broken, that most accidents are caused by motorists or persons getting off before the car stops. They point to the cars' length of service, whereas buses have a life span of about seven years, with high maintenance costs—particularly if they are used for climbing hills.

Furthermore, that little turntable, where passengers help the gripman and conductor push the car around at the foot of Powell st., has proved to be as great a tourist card as any other spot in a city filled with attractions.

"Even the city itself," said one admittedly confused publicity man, "spends up to $30,000 annually on its publicity and advertising fund, the chief purpose of which is to tell about the cable cars."

The city already has purchased what it believes to be the appropriate substitute — twin-motored buses. No cable cars have been laid off yet, but the city has put the hill-climbing buses into use on other steep runs, just to let the citizens know they work.

Only one organization has backed Mayor Lapman—the Real Estate Board. But this same board, in a hand bill sent over the country in connection with the realtors' national convention in November, features a picture of that same Powell st. turntable as San Francisco's trade-mark.

Water Sports Start At Virginia Beach

Virginia Beach, Va., June 7 (AP).—Water sports have come into their own again with the opening of the Cavalier Beach and Cabana Club, which has booked some of the top bands in the country for engagements extending through September.

Bands booked are those of Joe Sudy, Chuck Foster, Boyd Raeburn, Johnny Long, Dean Hudson, Tony Pastor and Randy Brooks.

Plans to build a swimming pool are being held in abeyance due to restrictions of the Civilian Production Administration, but efforts will be made to complete the project next spring.

MIAMI'S Tale of Two Cities

FOR SUMMER PLEASURE . . .
This gay, exciting Miami—sea-cooled headquarters for South Florida's famous pursuits of pleasure—offers a varied menu of diversion all summer. Anglers are here from every state for the best fishing of the year. Beautiful, breeze-swept ocean beaches, golf courses and recreation centers are uncrowded, in perfect condition. Boating is at its best. Brilliant after-dark entertainment in gay variety. And Miami's luxurious accommodations at attractive summer rates. Come this summer—you'll want to come again!
FOR ALL-YEAR LIVING . . .
Look carefully at the "other" Miami, too—the forward-marching, year 'round city of beautiful homes, better living and thriving industry. The people who live and work here enjoy "playtime" Miami's vast fun-facilities all 12 months. They live bountifully in a young, expanding market city whose trading area has a $700,000,000 building program underway—produces annually $230,000,000 in products of farm and factory. Their town is No. 1 U. S. passenger port of entry and exporter of air cargo—a fast-growing prosperous, beautiful "tropic metropolis" that's going places in a big way and invites you to come along!

Million Dollar Daily Take

Atlantic City Cottons to Conventions

ATLANTIC CITY'S CONVENTION HALL
... more than 300,000 visitors expected in 1947

By James P. Hackett

ATLANTIC CITY, June 7.—Conventions are big business again and for this resort means almost one million dollars a day for merchants, hotel operators and restaurateurs.

More than 300,000 persons came here last year to thresh out postwar reconversion problems.

Bookings by the city's Convention Bureau indicate at least another 300,000 delegates will attend meetings in 1947 and a like number in 1948.

When the 1946 income of the resort—more than 365 million dollars gross—was totaled, the city administration decided to change its advertising peg from "Playground of the World" to Convention Capital."

To the 70,000 residents of the resort, convention business still is a "pinch-me-am-I-awake" affair. Trained through the years to make their living from summer visitors, many are of the private opinion that the $20 a day spent by a delegate won't last.

Cashing In

Merchants boosted prices last year on the theory that it was wise to "make it while you can." Frankfurters sold for as high as 25 cents each at some boardwalk stands. Five-cent newspapers sold for 10 to 15 cents.

The city offers little for the "hoopla" type of delegate. So far that has been all right, because most delegates have been seriously concerned about the problems on the meeting agenda. There have been no snake dances in the streets in the small hours of the morning. No one has had the urge to build a bonfire on the beach.

Conventions fill in the ten "dead months." Without them, the city's 27,000 hotel rooms and thousands of rooms in "tourist homes" would be shut down most of the year.

No Large Welcome Mat

The city makes no effort to greet incoming delegates at the railroad station. Its publicity staff does see to it that a police escort and photographers are on hand to greet a motion-picture star, a bevy of models or a Government official But, if a convention group would like to be met, its officers must make a request well in advance.

The Convention Bureau on request will arrange such events as teas, fashion shows, bingo games, card parties and luncheons for delegates or for their wives and guests. The bureau will assist, too, in setting up other entertainment—golfing parties and deep-sea fishing.

Newtex Co. Is Renamed 'Texas Line'

A stem-to-stern revamping of the Newtex Steamship Corp.'s coastwise operations, involving a change of trade name, schedule shake-up and ship replacement program, has been announced by the company's parent organization, the Sword Line, Inc.

Formerly known as the Newtex Line, the fleet of coastwise vessels will now be known as the Texas Line. Newtex vessels are being replaced with 18-knot Victory ships, largest and fastest vessels ever placed in service to Texas ports, according to the company. Forced air ventilation and refrigeration will be added to the vessels as standard equipment.

A new schedule, providing 4½-day sailing time between New York and Houston, is now in effect and hereafter Texas Line ships will depart from Pier 42, Hudson River, on subsequent Thursdays at 5 p. m. Baltimore has been added to the line's northbound service.

New offices are being opened in Baltimore and Galveston and those in Brownsville and Dallas are being expanded.

Radar Helps

War Bombing Devices Fight Forest Fire

By Alexander R. George

RADAR, the proximity fuse and infrared rays may be teamed up with the helicopter, FM radio and the "smoke-jumper" to combat forest fires.

Another potential idea is "man-made" rain and snow. It's the "sowing" of dry ice from a plane to make a cloud precipitate on a burning forest. Experimental dry-icing has resulted in small-scale precipitation.

Forest Service officials say radar's ability to detect the approach of lightning storms may be helpful. Lightning starts thousands of forest blazes every summer.

The Forest Service has been using proximity fuses this spring to set off water chemical bombs in fire-fighting tests in Montana forests. A plane is rigged up with extra fuel tanks which hold 320 gallons of water chemicals. The tanks are dropped and the proximity fuse releases their contents. The bombs have been used mostly in cleaning up smouldering fires after the main blaze was quenched.

Swifter Detection

INFRARED rays may be of use in detecting forest fires. The rays, or heat waves, from a fire would be registered on an infrared receiver in a lookout station. Smoke is the common indicator of a forest fire, but the rays might afford quicker detection.

Frequency modulation radio is being installed in the communication network which connects ranger stations and lookouts with forest supervisors' offices. The aim is to eliminate static, which is quite heavy in electrical storm weather.

The Forest Service will have 250 "smoke-jumpers" on the job this summer in the Rocky Mountain and Far West forest areas. These firefighters parachute from planes to battle back-country blazes.

Dropped on a fire while it is still small, four "smoke-jumpers" can squelch a blaze which later might require 300 or 400 ground fighters. The planes also parachute food and supplies to men on a big fire.

'Lift' Improved

FORESTERS hope that improved performance of helicopters will provide a method of taking firefighters to and from a blaze. They also would be used to carry out injured persons.

Two helicopter drawbacks have been the difficulty of rising to required heights with a payload and of landing with such a load. New high-lift propellors have increased the elevation at which they can operate.

Forest use of airplanes is being increased. In one large Montana area, a system of airplane detection combined with a smoke-jumping patrol proved more effective than the old system. As a result, some lookout positions have been discontinued and the money used for the flying patrol.

Loss Is Dropping

IMPROVED methods of fire-fighting, coupled with Nation-wide campaigns against carelessness by forest visitors, have helped reduce the forest fire toll.

In 1933 the Wilson River fire in Oregon burned over 267,000 acres in 11 days with an estimated loss of $350,000,000. The amount of fine virgin timber burned was equal to the entire timber cut in the United States in 1932.

In 1945 the total timber and property damage from all forest fires was estimated at $26,726,000. Despite the decrease, the 1945 fires destroyed enough timber to build more than 200,000 five-room homes.

Great fires ravaged the forests of this land more than 1200 years before Columbus discovered America. Growth rings in the California big trees show fires as far back as the year 245. Maine white spruces tell of a fire about 1795 which covered some 200 square miles.

The heaviest recorded death toll was in the Peshtigo, Wis., fire in October, 1871. Some 1500 persons lost their lives, towns were razed and 1,280,000 acres were burned over. By a strange coincidence, the Peshtigo fire raged on the same day as the famous Chicago fire, which killed only one seventh as many persons.

D. C. 'Umtee' To Be Model For Billboard

By a Staff Reporter

FORT KNOX, Ky., May 31.—Washington's lone representative in the Army's pilot universal military training unit here has been selected as the "typical Umtee" of the history-making battalion.

He is Pvt. Charles M. (Smoky) Stover of 429 Quackenbos st. nw., a 17-year-old former Coolidge High School student. Stover enlisted last winter and was assigned to the UMT unit—an experimental force pioneering the way for possible universal training for America.

The American Legion—which is backing the plan—will soon placard the Nation with a UMT poster. "Smoky" was picked by the Army as the typical trainee to pose for the billboard.

Stover comes by his Army interest naturally. His dad—now working for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Clifton Forge, Va.—was a master sergeant in the Persian Gulf Command during the war. His mother is Mrs. Margaret Stover, who is a secretary at National Cathedral.

The slight but wiry soldier is assigned to the armored force unit of the "Umtees" and can drive one of the big Pershing tanks or fire its 90-millimeter gun.

He likes the Army and plans either to reenlist or take advantage of the GI Bill of Rights and go to military school after he finishes his present hitch. If he can't be an Army officer, "Smoky," would like to be an engineer.

Stover wants it known that the teenage "Umptees" are not being coddled. Their training is as tough as his prior service at an Army Replacement Training Center. Next duty: Either Fort Meade, Md., or overseas.

London Gets Hagenbeck's Zoo Stock

HAMBURG, (AP).—The British steamer Starling recently sailed from Hamburg like a modern Noah's Ark, loaded with animals for the London Zoo.

The animals had been requisitioned from Hagenbeck's circus and zoo, once Europe's largest "big top" concern.

The cargo included a wild Mongolian horse—one of the few wild horses in captivity—a zebra, four ostriches, 10 flamingoes, 13 cranes, 4 kangaroos and an assortment of ducks, geese and swans.

The animals were sent to London on the orders of the British military government, Carl Hagenbeck said.

"Although we have managed to feed them for the past eight years I was told that the reason was shortage of foodstuffs.

"An ostrich, for instance, needs nothing but green vegetation in the summer. Another list is being drawn up for shipments to other zoos and I expect eventually to lose 50 per cent of my zoo.

"The animals will be away for three years, that is a long time in an animal's life, and some of these are no longer young, so I do not know how many I will see again."

Still remaining, until further requisitioning takes place, are antelopes, buffaloes, brown and polar bears, lions, a chimpanzee and a wide variety of birds.

The Hagenbeck circus lost a large number of animals which were with a road show in Sweden, Hagenbeck said. They were seized by the Swedish government and sold to the Ringling and Barnum and Bailey circus of America.

Trout Streams Opened In the Great Smokies

Nashville, June 7.—Trout fishermen are having the time of their lives along the mountains of east Tennessee.

The 600 miles of trout streams in the Great Smoky Mountains have been opened for the first time since the Great Smoky Mountains National Park was established. In the past only a few miles of some of the streams were open each season.

Though most of the east Tennessee streams abound in rainbow, with speckled trout at the high altitudes, the Tellico River is still the favorite for trout.

The trout season extends to October 1. Other game fish may be caught the year around in the big lakes of Tennessee.

400,000 Homeless Would Be Admitted

'DP' Bill Faces Ethnic Obstacle

The children in the Duppel camp for displaced persons, in suburban Berlin, march to the community mess hall. When this picture was made there were 7200 persons in the center including 525 orphan children

By Sigrid Arne
By The Associated Press

EUROPE'S guns have been silent two years and still some 800,000 Europeans have no place to live except "displaced persons" camps in Germany, Austria and Italy.

The camps mean a roof and meals. The refugees have set up some work for themselves—schools for children, shoemakers' shops and the like. But that's no answer to life for the long pull.

Most of them refuse to return to their old homes because their countries are under Communist or Communist - tinged governments. Only a fifth are Jews. They want to clear out of Europe entirely since it is literally the cemetery of millions of their kind.

The United Nations has recognized these homeless people as an "international responsibility." It has extended help through UNRRA and shortly the International Refugee Organization is expected to be at work running the camps.

But these people "want out" to citizenship, work, the right to plan for the future, to a feeling of being normal.

However, the "out" depends on the willingness of the U. N. member governments to accept them as new citizens.

Bipartisan Movement

THE UNITED STATES is one possible haven. Congress will be asked to decide just how open the American gate will be permitted to hang.

STRATTON

The specific bill, up for hearings this month was written by a Republican, Representative William G. Stratton, of Illinois. He has support of the Democratic Administration.

Stratton asks that 400,000 of the homeless be admitted to this country over the next four years outside the regular immigration quotas.

His bill is supported by the Citizens Committee for Displaced Persons, under the leadership of Earl Harrison, dean of law at the University of Pennsylvania. The group includes religious and foreign-language associations.

The bill is opposed by some members of Congress, mostly from the South and Midwest, and by several veterans' groups.

Opposition arises from a fear of unemployment in this country.

There is an additional basis for opposition which is more complicated. It springs from the fact that most of today's homeless in Europe are either Slavs or Jews.

Can't Be Coaxed

THE CONGRESS which passed the Immigration Act of 1917 set quotas which limited the influx of the Slav people. The intent was to preserve the ethnic character of this country by getting people from western Europe and the Scandinavian countries who would fit more easily into the established customs of the United States.

Britain, with a population of nearly 48 million, has a quota of 65,721 immigrants into the United States a year. Poland, with a population of about 23 million, has a quota of only 6524. Even so, in 1939 only half as many British as Poles entered the country. As one Washington diplomat puts it, "You don't get people from the happy nations."

The Stratton bill would open the way for the ratio between western Europeans and Slavs to be upset for the four-year period of its operation.

Supporters of the bill say that there is ample room here for 400,000 new citizens. Immigration has been dropping since the '30s. Immigration laws permit the entrance of 153,879 new citizens a year, but in each of the past eight years only a fifth that many have arrived.

20-Year Backlog

NOW IMMIGRANTS are entering the country at the rate of 29,000 a year, and about 18,000 of those are displaced persons. But the entries permissible under the quotas don't balance the nationalities of the people who want to come here. Poland, for instance, has enough applicants to eat up 11 years of quotas. Greece's quotas are filled for the next 20 years.

Meanwhile other nations are helping to find homes for Europe's homeless. Brazil is set to take 5000 "DPS" this year, and the first boatload arrived at Rio in early May. Venezuela has signed for up to 15,000 this year.

Peru, Chile and Colombia are dickering and may take up to 10,000 each. Britain is taking about 1000 a week on work contracts, but not on permanent citizenship basis. In particular, it is taking Baltic women for work in hospitals, and men for the mines. Belgium is hunting 20,000 miners. Holland wants industrial workers.

France is willing to absorb a couple of million German workers—for the simple reason that it would cut down Germany's manpower for a World War III.

A Repairman Counsels Tyros Of the Camera

By Booton Herndon

ALWAYS before anything big is scheduled to pop in Hong Kong, Bucharest or Buenos Aires, the crack photographers in New York City gather in Oscar Heinemann's camera repair shop.

A mild-mannered man with bright blue eyes, Oscar can renovate even a completely smashed camera. Once he received one from the Pacific by way of Texas. Oscar wrote the owner that it would be cheaper to buy a new one.

"This is the camera I intend to use for the rest of my life," the letter said. Heinemann fixed it.

Heinemann believes in going to any lengths to give service. One day Bill Vandivert phoned him long distance and shouted, "My camera broke down in the middle of a job. Tell me how to fix it!"

Long Distance Repair

HUNDREDS of miles away, Oscar told him to get a screwdriver. When he had finished directing the repair job, the camera worked like new.

Born in England, Heinemann put in a long, hard apprenticeship in fine optics in Germany. Then he went to Cairo, where he specialized in camera repair.

One day when Photographer Herbert Gehr was snapping a group of English officers sand-sailing wagons across the desert, a rampaging vehicle smashed Gehr's camera.

After a desperate search for someone who could fix it, he found Heinemann—who stayed up all night on the job. Six years ago, when Gehr came to the United States, he talked Heinemann into following him.

Patching up expensive professional cameras is easier than repairing the occasional cheap ones which Heinemann gets. "There's no really fair charge for a $2 camera," he says.

Tips for Amateurs

HERE are some tips from Heinemann on how to keep a camera in top-notch condition. "When you go to the beach," he says, "an ordinary camera case won't keep out the sand. Put the camera in a paper bag, then twist the bag shut. After each shot, put the camera right back in again."

When not in use, Heinemann advises, cameras should be kept in a cool, dry, dust-free place with the shutter released. Before use, the camera should be dusted with a camel's-hair brush and blown clean with a syringe. Never use oil or graphite on the mechanism.

Because of his reputation, photographers rely on Heinemann for rush jobs. Once Bradley Smith was on a job in California when he got an assignment to go to India. The same day he lost his Heinemann-equipped camera.

Smith promptly wired money and instructions, then hopped a plane for New York. Another camera with identical attachments was waiting for him when he arrived. In India he took hundreds of pictures. Every one came out.

"I envy people with skill like that," Heinemann says. "I tried to take pictures once—but they were all terrible."
